> Ordinarily, enforcement of a consent decree is assumed by the Department of Justice. When the Department feels that a provision of a decree has been violated, the Department can ask that the violator be adjudged in contempt of court and request that an appropriate penalty be imposed. It appears that in this case the Department has specifically resigned these powers. Enforcement of the decree is instead imposed on the members of the industry and to a considerable extent on the weaker members of the industry. (P. 84.)

ON APPEALS FROM UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT FOR THE SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF NEW YORK.

Brief of American Civil Liberties Union, Amicus Curiae.

Statement.

Plaintiff, United States of America, appeals from so much of the decree of a statutory three-judge court convened in the Southern District of New York, as denies such plaintiff's prayer for divestiture of the ownership interests of the five major defendants, Paramount, Loew's, RKO, Warner, and Fox, in motion picture theatres throughout the United States. Defendants cross-appeal from all other parts of such decree which grant injunctive and certain other relief to plaintiff.

The gravamen of the complaint is that defendants have established an unlawful monopoly in the field of production, distribution, and exhibition of motion pictures to the detriment of the public interests. As indicated in plaintiff's charge, and as established by the evidence, the closely inter-related factors largely responsible for such usurpation by defendants of monopolistic control over substantially the entire motion picture industry, are basically two. These are:

1. The acquisition and operation by five of such major defendants of the finest and the largest first-run motion picture theatres strategically located in the key cities and metropolitan areas of the United States, and

2. Certain illegal and discriminatory trade practices by all defendants which have unquestionably frustrated, limited, and even destroyed competition, with the concomitant impairment of the rights of the movie-going public to enjoy the benefits of the widest possible diversity in the production and the exhibition of motion pictures.

The American Civil Liberties Union is a non-partisan and non-sectarian organization with a membership of thousands of persons in the United States. For the past twenty-five years it has striven to effectuate its object as expressed in its charter—to wit: "to maintain throughout the United States and its possessions the rights of free speech, free press, free assemblage, and other civil rights, and to take legitimate action in furtherance of such purposes".

The issues of this case, concerning as they do so extraordinary a medium of communications, are of paramount social importance and vitally affect the general public. At stake in the final resolution of these issues by this Tribunal is nothing less than the foremost constitutional freedom of the people to see and hear, at a fair price of admission, timely talking motion pictures of their own selection from a reasonably diversified supply.

POINT I.

The liberties and rights of the General Public to enjoy the benefits of maximum diversification in the production and the exhibition of motion pictures are guaranteed by the First Amendment.

The motion picture of today is a first-line dynamic conduit of thought on a par with the press and the radio. It is in some respects far more striking in its power of stimulating and captivating the human imagination and mind than any book-literature, the daily press, and the radio. Its predominantly visual character endows its moving and expressive language of imagery with the quality of universality. And its wonderful, magical, continuous telescoping of images and ideas in rapid motion, whether imparting entertainment or a serious message concerning the morals, the social mores, and the institutions of our times, renders it peculiarly capable of exerting an impressionable force on its viewers. So powerfully magnetic is its appeal that its patrons in the United States now number more than 95,000,000, in terms of weekly paid admissions, at motion picture theatres.[1]

It is through the medium of motion pictures that many millions of people are given social, economic, and political notions. Such notions may be good or bad. They may be accurate or inaccurate. They may tend to inspire the people to attain a higher or lower level of culture. In short, motion pictures are vitally important factors in shaping the emotional habits, the intellectual knowledge, the artistic taste, the social mores, and the morals of the public, as well as their convictions on current questions in the community, the state, the nation, and the world.

Thus, as is recognized in "The Annals of the American Academy of Political and Social Science" ("The Motion Picture in Its Economic and Social Aspects"), November, 1926 issue, Vol. 128, No. 217, p. 66:

> "The production of the cinema has greatly contributed to that which in its accumulative influence is the most priceless of all human possessions—knowledge. As an educator it is catering daily to the intelligence of millions. Unparalleled in their power to almost spontaneously flash before the entire civilized world the happenings, opinions, events of great magnitude, appeals, indeed of all things that are of interest to mankind, stand two recently developed agents: the cinema through the eye, the radio through the ear. • • •
> "The importance of the cinema in the social, economic and intellectual life of the world can scarcely be realized."

Thus, in their comprehensive report to the United States Senate[2] on their investigation of monopolistic conditions prevailing in the motion picture industry, Evans and Bertrand say:

> "• • • the motion picture industry commenced as a novel and pleasing type of entertainment, but it has evolved into an important social and cultural force.[3] In some sense, it provides a common denominator to the feelings and aspirations of an entire people. Its importance must then be measured in terms other than the conventional ones of dollars and cents."

To allow the Five Theatre-Owning Majors[4] and the Little Three[5] to exercise dominion by means of their concentrated economic powers over such a powerful social instrumentality is to seriously damage our democratic institutions. Our fundamental interests and reasons for reasonably freeing it of the restraint now firmly gripping it are precisely identical with those[6] for maintaining the

3. The social and cultural value of motion pictures as an instrumentality of communications is also emphasized by Zechariah Chafee, Jr., Professor of Law at Harvard University, in his treatise "Free Speech in the United States" (1942 Ed., p. 547), and by Norman Woelfel of the Bureau of Educational Research of Ohio State University, in his exposition on the American Communicative Networks entitled "Radio-Movies-Press", published in 1946, pp. 2-3, 7-9, 13.

4. Paramount, Loew's, RKO, Warner and Fox.

5. Columbia, United Artists and Universal.

6. Particularly apposite is the illuminating statement on the desirability and wholesale power of free trade and ideas of Mr. Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes, appearing in his dissenting opinion reported in Abrams et al. v. U. S., 250 U. S. 616, 630. Mr. Justice Louis D. Brandeis concurred in such statement and there appears to be no disagreement with it on the part of the majority justices. Vide Cantwell et al. v. State of Connecticut, 310 U. S. 296, 310, and Thornhill v. State of Alabama, 310 U. S. 88, 95, where the doctrine of civil liberties under the First Amendment is expounded.

freedom of the other two important media of communications, the press and the radio.

But, as is demonstrated by the proofs in the record, the Big Five, through their monopoly ownership in the finest, the largest, and the strategically situated first-run motion picture theatres of the United States, and the illegal, discriminatory and monopolistic trade practices furthered by them in concert with the Little Three, have effectively frustrated and even destroyed competition of ideas in the production and the exhibiting of motion pictures. In consequence of this, the general public has been deprived of its rights of selectivity. Thus the Eight Monopolistic Film Majors have, in effect, established an economic dictatorship over one of the world's three greatest media for the dissemination of ideas and materials of persuasion and public opinion. These defendants stifle the freedom of expression of diverse minds which wish to produce and exhibit motion pictures designed to be most responsive to the real needs and tastes of the general public. These defendants, in effect, have usurped and exercised powers of censorship over the vital stuff which the minds of the general public absorb. They have arrogated to themselves exclusively the power of determining what movie patrons shall see and hear. They have even presumed to fix arbitrarily the occasions when, if at all, their own motion pictures might be shown in unaffiliated motion picture theatres in different areas.

If our fundamental guarantees of free speech, free assemblage, and free press, under the First Amendment, could not be invoked to arrest such control over so basic a medium of communications as motion pictures, then, indeed, it will not be long before they may become illusory.

Presumably mindful of the continual evolutionary character and advent of new communicative media and the social importance of their uses, Mr. Chief Justice Hughes in Lovell v. City of Griffin, 303 U. S. 444, 452 said:

* * * * *

"* * * The liberty of the press is not confined to newspapers and periodicals. * * * The press in its historic connotation comprehends every sort of publication which affords a vehicle of information and opinion." (Emphasis ours.)

And Professor Zechariah Chafee, Jr.,[7] in his treatise "Free Speech in the United States" (1942 Ed.) pointed out:

"* * * (P. 534) All the objections to a press censorship apply as well to film censorship, especially in an age when more persons probably go to the movies than read books."

It is significant that, as early as 1915, in the very first anti-trust case brought by the Government to break the patents monopoly in the motion picture industry,[8] the United States District Court of Eastern Pennsylvania stressed the fundamental constitutional civil-liberties basis of the Sherman Act. Said the Court (P. 802):

* * * * *

"* * * The beginnings of this controversy are found in the age-long struggle 'to secure the blessings of liberty', to obtain which is stated to be one of the objects of our Constitution. There is deep-grained in human nature the impulse to influence, and, so far as it can be done, control, the actions of others. It is too much to expect that this control, when secured, will always be exerted for altruistic ends. Out of this condition has arisen the need of a power of government to check the restraints which the strong would otherwise impose upon those whom they could control. * * *

7. The author is Professor of Law at Harvard University. At page 545 of his treatise he stresses the flexible character of the Constitutional terms "liberty" and "freedom of speech" as being such as to embrace "new media for the communication of ideas and facts".

"* * * The particular phase of liberty with which this law concerns itself is the freedom or free flow of commerce. * * * It secures this 'blessing of liberty' to all by making it unlawful for any to conspire to bring about 'restraint of trade or commerce'. This is the genesis and motive of the act of July 2, 1890."

The views concerning radio, as expressed by Mr. Justice Murphy[9] of this Tribunal, just 28 years later, are equally pertinent to motion pictures. Paraphrasingly and analogously quoted these are:

"Although radio broadcasting [the motion picture], like the press, is generally conducted on a commercial basis, it is not an ordinary business activity, like the selling of securities or the marketing of electrical power. In the dissemination of information and opinion, radio [the motion picture] has assumed a position of commanding importance rivalling the press and the pulpit. * * * because of its vast potentialities as a medium of communication, discussion and propaganda, the character and extent of control that should be exercised over it by the Government is a matter of deep and vital concern." (Bracketed insertions supplied.)

9. Part of the dissenting opinion of Mr. Justice Murphy in National Broadcasting Co. v. U. S., 319 U. S. 190, 228. With this particular observation there was no disagreement on the part of the majority of this Court.

And emphatically apropos of the motion picture as a medium of communications is the juristic philosophy of Circuit Court Judge Learned Hand, as promulgated in 1943 with reference to the daily press in U. S. v. Associated Press et al., 52 Fed. Supp. 362, 372, aff'd in 326 U. S. 1:

* * * * *

> "* * * However, neither exclusively, nor even primarily, are the interests of the newspaper industry conclusive; for that industry serves one of the most vital of all general interests: the dissemination of news from as many different sources, and with as many different facets and colors as is possible. That interest is closely akin to, if indeed it is not the same as, the interest protected by the First Amendment; it presupposes that right conclusions are more likely to be gathered out of a multitude of tongues, than through any kind of authoritative selection. To many this is, and always will be, folly; but we have staked upon it our all." (Italics supplied.)

In an opinion concurring[16] in the affirmance by this Court of the decision and decree of Circuit Court Judge Hand, Mr. Justice Frankfurter condemned as the worst evil in the Associated Press monopoly, the exercise of censorship powers by private enterprise over so important an instrumentality of communications as the press in the following language (PP. 28-29):

* * * * *

> "* * * But the freedom of enterprise protected by the Sherman Law necessarily has different aspects in relation to the press than in the case of ordinary commercial pursuits. The interest of the public is to have the flow of news not trammeled by the combined self-interest of those who enjoy a unique constitutional position precisely because of the public dependence on a free press. A public interest so essential to the vitality of our democratic government may be defeated by private restraints no less than by public censorship." (Emphasis ours.)

In terms of the modern instrumentalities of communications such as the radio, the daily press, and the motion picture, the constitutionally guaranteed rights of free speech and free press must be viewed as being dual in character. Obviously, they relate not merely to the primary freedom of the speaker, the writer, or the pictorial artist. They also refer implicitly, but nonetheless very definitely, to the correlative liberty of the listener, the reader, and the viewer—the ultimate consumer of ideas, opinions and propaganda.

The duality of the character of such constitutional rights has been pointedly recognized in Martin v. City of Struthers, 319 U. S. 141, 143. In that case, this Court declared as invalid a municipal ordinance which purported to outlaw the ringing of doorbells as an incident of distributing religious literature to the general public. In the course of his opinion, Mr. Justice Black pronounced succinctly (P. 143):

* * * * *

"The right of freedom of speech and press has broad scope. The authors of the First Amendment knew that novel and unconventional ideas might disturb the complacent, but they chose to encourage a freedom which they believed essential if vigorous enlightenment was ever to triumph over slothful > ignorance. This freedom embraces the right to distribute literature, Lovell v. Griffin, 303 U. S. 444, 452, 82 L. Ed. 949, 954, 59 S. Ct. 666, and necessarily protects the right to receive it." (Italics supplied.)

This constitutional freedom of every individual to receive communications is the most important of all his freedoms. Comprehended in it, of course, is his undeniable and inalienable right to education in every sphere of ideas and the full enjoyment of all his faculties.[11]

To the extent that the arbitrary censorial monopolistic economic power wielded by the "Big Eight" infringes upon the Constitutional freedom of expression of independents in the production and the selection of motion pictures, it at the same time encroaches upon the vitally important Constitutional rights of the general public to see and receive ideas in motion pictures of its choice.[12]

Generally speaking, the message of the motion picture can reach the public only in theatres. Because of the huge monetary investment required for their construction and maintenance, motion picture theatres are limited in number. In various areas of the country there are no more than one or two theatres for the simple reason that the patronage of such areas can support no more. If a producer releases for theatrical exhibition a feature motion picture whose dramatic story tends to sustain the thesis that under certain circumstances of late American frontier history, lynching was justifiable or excusable,[13] it would probably take many weeks or months and an expenditure of from $500,000 to $1,000,000 or more before another film dramatically presenting the other side of that question could be made and put on the theatrical market. And, even under the most ideal competitive conditions, such film would of necessity have to await its regular turn for some reasonable time before any available theatre, which books in advance its movie fare, exhibited it. By reasons of such factors peculiar to the motion picture industry, it is not quite possible to present to the general public controversial films embodying all conceivable diverse points of view at one and the same time, or, in sequence, at reasonable intervals apart.

12. Indeed, such constitutional rights of the general public serve to emphasize strongly the "public interest" aspects of the Sherman Act, controlling the decisions in several recent motion picture monopoly cases. William Goldman Theatres, Inc. v. Loew's Inc. et al., 150 Fed. 2d, 738, 743 (August 2, 1945, C. C. A. 3rd) rehearing denied September 21, 1945; U. S. v. Schine Chain Theatres Inc. et al., 63 Fed. Supp. 229, 241 (1945, Dist. Ct. W. D. N. Y.) appeal dismissed in 329 U. S. 686, rehearing granted in 329 U. S. 817-818; Paramount Famous Lasky Corp. et al. v. U. S., 282 U. S. 30, 42; White Bear Theatre Corp. v. State Theatre Corp. et al., 129 Fed. 2d 600-605 (1942, C. C. A. 8th).

The radio, even with its own peculiar physical limitations in the number of wave lengths available for broadcasting purposes, is a medium which leads directly into the homes of the people substantially everywhere. Many different ideas and opinions can be quickly transmitted through it at reasonably short intervals on any one day or during any single hour. The cost of each broadcast is far less than that required for the production and the exhibition of a motion picture.

The greatest advantage which the daily press enjoys is its ability to present multifarious thoughts and attitudes simultaneously and even side by side. In this respect it is not hampered by any of the difficulties inherent in the radio and the motion picture.

As hereinafter demonstrated,[14] the aforementioned "natural" handicaps of the motion picture are multiplied and worsened more than a thousand times by the various artificial impediments to the free flow of intellectual and artistic communications which characterize the pattern of monopolistic control in the motion picture industry. It is precisely against the evils of this condition—i. e., restrictions on the freedom of reasonable diversity of expression of ideas and thoughts in motion pictures—that the rights of the general public must be accorded realistic and permanent protection under the First Amendment.

POINT II.

Defendants' monopolistic combination and control over the largest and the finest theatres in various strategic centres of the United States and their predatory trade practices constitute an illegal and detrimental interference with the constitutional liberties and rights of the general public.

The huge multi-million dollar motion picture industry[15] rests principally upon a tight monopolistic control directly and indirectly over our nation's motion picture theatres. To be sure, the five major defendants, Paramount, Loew's, RKO, Fox, and Warner's, own only approximately 3,137 theatres—about 17.35%—of an aggregate of 18,076 theatres operating throughout the United States. But these 3,137 theatres embrace the largest and the finest in the country.

They also include 71% of the first-run theatres strategically located in the various important metropolitan centres of the United States. Although they represent 25% of the aggregate seating capacity of 11,700,000 for all theatres in America, they yield at least 45% of the entire country's box office receipts. In this connection it is significant to note that such five major defendants collectively receive as film distributors more than 70% of the total film rental derived from first run theatres in the United States.[15a]

The qualitative significance of the Big Five's affiliated theatres derives chiefly from their unusual size, unique physical quality, and strategic location. Whereas the average seating capacity for all theatres in the nation is 620, the average affiliated theatre, it is estimated, seats about 1,000. Indeed, such affiliated theatres as are in the category of de luxe metropolitan theatres run up an average in excess of 1,400 seats. Not only are such theatres the largest, but they are the most elegant in their physical appointments. And what is of very considerable importance, they are strategically established so as to render easy the exercise of dominion over the various thickly populated urban centres throughout the United States. Out of 92 American cities with populations exceeding 100,000, 73 of them, by virtue of such dominion over such first-run theatres exclusively, yield to the Theatre-Owning Big Five more than half of the nation's box office receipts. And in all cities of 1,000,000 or more in population the Big Five are the proprietors of the more lucrative neighborhood motion picture houses.

Moreover, in the final analysis, the most important fact of all is that such affiliated theatres exhibit almost entirely the movie fare consisting of films produced and distributed by the Big Five and their satellites, the Little Three.[16] This fact assumes strong significance when it is realized that the Big Eight control 70% of all motion pictures and 95% of the so-called quality films,[17] and 100% of the news films.

The business policy of these monopolists is designed so as substantially to exclude the independent producers' films from such affiliated theatres. The occasions when they permit the showing in their theatres of an independent's motion picture are conspicuously rare. And, what is more, the substantial exclusion of independents from the affiliated theatres automatically operates to discourage and effectively bar them from the rest of the theatrical exhibition markets.[18] For no independent would risk his personal resources in the making of motion pictures unless he had assured access to the affiliated theatres which produce at least 45% of the entire country's box office receipts and more than 70% of our national first run theatre box-office receipts.[18a] Nor would any bank, as a rule, undertake to finance his productions without some commitment or guarantee by the majors to distribute and exhibit them in their affiliated theatres.

The immediate effect of this monopolistic control of our largest and finest first-run theatres is to deny to the general public their constitutionally guaranteed rights to reasonable diversity in the production and the exhibition of motion pictures and freedom of selectivity. The general public, who contribute every single dollar of the overwhelming majority of our national first-run theatre box office receipts—as high as 70%—and at least 45% of the national box office receipts generally—directly to the theatre-owning defendants, have a vital interest in seeing and hearing, without artificial barriers of any kind, as many competitively produced films as possible. Only in that way can they enjoy the full benefits from the diversified artistic and cultural ideas and messages presented in such films. They should not be restricted, as they are now, to the movie fare of the Eight Majors. Such movie fare, generally speaking, is not responsive to the real tastes and desires of the general public, nor, for that matter, to their needs for the furtherance of their moral, intellectual and esthetic development.[19]

The deleterious character of the theatre-ownership monopoly of the Majors is substantially aggravated in another important respect. Invariably, the Majors prolong the exhibition of their films in affiliated first-run theatres as long as possible—frequently for many weeks or months. They do this for two principal reasons. The first is that in this way they can skim off for themselves the cream of the box office potentialities of each film. This is accomplished simply by compelling millions of movie-goers interested in seeing and hearing the newest and most timely talking pictures to pay the exorbitantly high prices of admission to affiliated theatres. The second reason is that the Majors, in furtherance of their monopoly in the distribution of films, use their affiliated theatres as show windows for their film wares. Long exhibition runs simultaneously in various key affiliated theatres, together with customarily lavish and sustained publicity campaigns, have been found to be effective devices for injecting "prestige value" in even inferior films of the Majors so as to attract unsuspecting unaffiliated exhibitors and many, many thousands of movie-goers. Obviously, the longer the exhibition run of any film at any theatre, the shorter or more limited does the available screen time for the showing of other motion pictures become.

19. An interesting critical article on the movie fare of the Majors entitled Hollywood's Terror Films, by Siegfried Kracauer, is contained in the August, 1946 issue of COMMENTARY, Vol. 2, No. 2, pp. 132-136. In discussing the serious question, "Do They Reflect the American State of Mind?"—the author, who is a member of the staff of the Museum of Modern Art Film Library, states: "Films saturated with terror and sadism have issued from Hollywood in such numbers recently as to become commonplace."

As a result of this artificially created bottleneck in affiliated first-run theatres, there is constantly accumulating a backlog of finished films on the shelves of the Majors and their public exhibition is delayed many months, a year or two or even longer. Translated into terms of injurious consequences to the general public, this means that they are denied their constitutional freedom of opportunity to see and to hear the newest motion pictures as promptly as is reasonably possible after their completion. It also means that they are precluded from enjoying the immediate benefits of the esthetic and cultural contributions, if any, of the various writers, actors, directors, cameramen and other screen technicians whose composite labors are impressed in each film.

But what considerably worsens all the more the evils of such theatre-ownership monopoly of the Majors are the predatory trade practices which grip firmly all branches of the motion picture industry in a stranglehold. Several of the salient illegal trade practices imposed and maintained by the concerted acts of such Majors are these: (1) fixing of minimum admission prices to various motion picture theatres affiliated and unaffiliated; (2) coercive block booking of motion pictures; (3) blind selling of motion pictures; (4) forced selling of newsreels, travelogues and other short subjects; (5) unreasonable clearance; and (6) unfair discrimination in favor of large circuits of theatres, affiliated and unaffiliated. Sufficient descriptions and illustrations of these monopolistic activities are contained in the record and in the opinion of the court below.[20] Manifestly, then, any delineation of such evils would serve no useful purpose within the scope of this brief.

These discriminatory and various other unfair trade practices are complements of the monopoly maintained by the Majors horizontally and vertically, throughout the motion picture industry. By them many vestiges of free competition have been eliminated from the market place. And it is with their aid that defendants have arrogated to themselves dangerous censorial powers over what moviegoers of America, estimated at more than 95,000,000 paid admissions per week,[21] shall see and hear.

Let us suppose the Big Eight acquired and maintained the same stifling discriminatory monopolistic control over our radio broadcasting and reception facilities so that no one could hear and enjoy radio programs except in certain strategically situated affiliated stores for indefinitely long periods, and thereafter in designated local neighborhood places. Certainly in that situation the frustration of the constitutional liberties of the general public to receive and enjoy at their convenience timely and variegated radio communications, would be undeniable. This conclusion would be inescapable particularly in view of what this tribunal said in National Broadcasting Co. Inc. et al. v. U. S. et al., 319 U. S. 190, 216:

> "The 'public interest' to be served under the Communications Act is thus the interest of the listening public in 'the larger and more effective use of radio', * * *. 'An important element of public interest and convenience affecting the issue of the license is the ability of the licensee to render the best practical service to the community reached by his broadcast." (Italics ours.)

If the Big Eight transposed their discriminatory monopolistic stranglehold on films and theatres to the sphere of the press, and if, as a consequence, one could not buy a newspaper except from distantly located affiliated newsstands during preempted periods of indefinite duration, and subsequently from certain local neighborhood newspaper vendors, the public evils would be substantially identical with those in the hypothetical radio situation, and would be just as condemnable. In this connection it should be noted that even in the Associated Press case,[22] the public in various areas had access to at least a single paper featuring Associated Press service, and in addition to other papers with competitive news services in such areas. It was also possible for readers to have Associated Press newspapers mailed to them. Yet, the monopolistic practices of Associated Press were judicially declared invalid and prohibited because they restricted diversity and selectivity in communications on which "we have staked * * * our all".[23]

But the public evils stemming from the unwholesome conditions in the motion picture industry are far more serious. This is so principally because motion pictures are capable of more subtle and persuasive influences on the mind and the imagination than either the radio or the press.[24]

The pivotal issue of importance in this case concerns the constitutional freedom of the population in any small community, as well as of the public in the large metropolitan centers, to see and to hear at their convenience the more recent and reasonably diversified films as early as possible after general release. There can be no valid reason why those living, say, in the Borough of Richmond, or The Bronx, in New York City, should be compelled to travel distances to the Great White Way in Manhattan to see a first-run exhibition of a film at the Roxy Theatre, owned by defendant Fox, or at the Capitol Theatre, controlled by the defendant Loew's. They should be just as free to see, hear, and enjoy the very same film in their local neighborhood theatres at a reasonably prompt time after its general release as they are to go to their neighborhood newsstands for the latest newspapers or book stores for the most timely books.

The question of the unimpeded flow of films to the small community was directly involved in the recent case of White Bear Theatre Corporation v. State Theatre Corporation et al., 129 Fed. 2d, 600, 604-605 (1942 C. C. A., 8th). There plaintiff charged defendants with conspiring and attempting to obtain a monopoly upon all procurable first-run feature films for a certain local community for the purpose of driving plaintiff, a competing exhibitor, out of business. Said the Court (PP. 604-605):

"* * * The result of the conspiracy and attempted monopoly, in addition to the injury to plaintiff, was to deprive the populace of White Bear Lake and its environs of having exhibited to them locally, during the current season a number of 'first-run' productions which they would otherwise have had the opportunity to see. A further result was that this substantial number of films which would otherwise have moved in the channels of interstate commerce through the distributing offices at Minneapolis to White Bear Lake, was artfully blocked in its flow at Minneapolis.

"Strangling the competitive forces of the interstate market on 'first-run' films for White Bear Lake * * * depriving the populace of White Bear Lake and environs of the privilege of seeing productions at the times and in the manner that they would have otherwise been exhibited to them, if the competitive forces of the interstate market had not thus been improperly strangled; and artfully blocking at Minneapolis the flow of interstate commerce which * * * would otherwise have moved into White Bear Lake—these were all matters of sufficient general public interest to bring the situation within the operation of the Sherman Act.

* * * * * *

"In principle and within the intendment of the Sherman Act public interest is as much concerned with the improper control of the interstate market on the buyer's or seller's side for the little town of White Bear Lake as for the great metropolis of New York City or for any State, or for the country as a whole." (Italics supplied.)

POINT III.

Divestiture of the ownership interests of the five majors in motion picture theatres should be decreed by this Court to preclude a recurrence of the monopolistic evils and accord realistic permanent protection to the rights of the general public under the First Amendment.

A.

The General Public's Affirmative Case for Divestiture.

The relief[25] granted by the Court below includes, inter alia, abolition by injunction of the various illegal trade practices as referred to under Point II hereof, and dissolution of defendants' ownership interests, jointly with one another or with any independent, in certain motion picture theatres.

Such relief, however, does not suffice to meet the necessities of the situation. No matter how efficacious it in the aggregate may be, every single feature of it is but an incidental auxiliary to a remedy designed to accord complete justice, but conspicuously lacking in the case at bar. That remedy is divestiture of the ownership interests of the Five Majors in motion picture theatres.

Unless such divestiture is decreed, it will not be possible realistically to recreate the conditions of free competition so as to assure to the public reasonable diversity in the production and the exhibition of motion pictures.

25. 66 Fed. Supp. 323, 357-359.

With the decree as it now stands, the market place for the distribution and the exhibition of motion pictures is still substantially dominated by the Majors. The most important and the most lucrative segments of the exhibition market in particular are those where the Majors own and operate the finest and the largest first and subsequent-run theatres. Their first-run theatres alone represent 71% of all metropolitan first-run theatres throughout the United States. And these theatres alone yield at least 45% of the entire country's box-office receipts. Their owners, the Five Majors, as distributors, collect in excess of 70% of the total film rental derived from first-run theatres in the United States.[25a] Furthermore, their owners, the Five Majors, together with the Little Three, happen to constitute substantially the entire source of supply of motion pictures for the nation's moviegoers, estimated at more than 95,000,000 paid admissions per week.[26] With the exception of United Artists, the Big Eight are the nation's most opulent film producers. And all also constitute eight of the nation's eleven distributing organizations. As recognized in Goldman Theatres Inc. v. Loew's, Inc. et al., 150 Fed. 2d 738, 744-745 (1945, C. C. A., 3rd):

> "• • • Defendants control the production and distribution of more than 80% of the feature pictures in the country, and no exhibitor can successfully operate without access to defendants' product."

In their present dominant position of towering financial strength and control in all branches of the motion picture industry, they would no more be disposed to open up the choice and strategic affiliated theatres to independent film productions than they were before. And if independent film productions—the greatest maximum number possible—cannot be accorded access to these affiliated theatres, the general public, who contribute 70% of the entire country's first-run theatre box-office receipts and at least 45% of our country's box office receipts generally, directly to the Five Majors, will still remain deprived, in substantial measure, of the cultural and esthetic benefits of the widest selectivity possible in movie-fare.

Without independent producers in the film markets, it must follow that unaffiliated theatres will still remain helplessly dependent on the limited movie-fare of the producer-distributor-exhibitor defendants.[27] Since such unaffiliated theatres cannot exist without the films of the Big Eight, they will of necessity continue to be at their mercy. To expect these unaffiliated theatres to compete freely or to resist strongly any of the Majors in that kind of a film market is unrealistic. For, as was aptly remarked in U. S. v. Motion Picture Patents Company, 225 Fed. 800, 809 (E. D. Pa., 1915) appeal dismissed in 247 U. S. 524, "* * * It is too clear for comment that the mere

27. It is of interest to note that in Paramount Pictures, Inc. v. Langer, 23 Fed. Supp. 890, 899 (1938, D. C. N. D.), reversed only for mootness in 306 U. S. 619, the United States District Court stated the following: "* * * a producer which owns theatres has the power to make it impossible for the independent exhibitor to procure films from it and difficult to procure them from other major producers in case the producer-exhibitor desires these films for itself. There is evidence tending to show that producers with affiliated theatres have exercised the powers possessed by them for their own advantage and to the detriment of their independent competitors." The Langer case was cited with approval in Great Atlantic & Pacific Tea Co. v. Federal Trade Comm'n, 106 F. 2d 667, 678 (September 1939, C. C. A. 3rd) cert. den. in 308 U. S. 694.

Moreover, under the existing conditions, large numbers of people who would be interested in building and operating new and attractive motion picture theatres in the various parts of the country, are discouraged from doing so. They cannot be assured of having access to the first-run films of the Majors. Nor can they hope to get a sufficient quantity of feature films of independent producers.

In other words, the traditional equitable remedy of divestiture should be decreed in order to eradicate realistically and permanently all the monopolistic evils existing in the motion picture industry. Once the Majors are divorced from their theatres—and not until then—various independent producers will be encouraged to produce more films for what will be an assured free competitive market. When this happens, there will undoubtedly be erected and opened many additional competing motion picture theatres to serve the public. And of necessity, the Majors will then be obliged to vie with independents in a salutary race to produce diversified films of higher qualitative stature, greater public appeal, and considerably augmented value as contributions to the moral, intellectual, and esthetic development of the nation's many millions of movie-goers.

B.

Analysis of Salient Features of Statutory Courts' Opinion on Divestiture.

(a) Quantitative Cold Brick and Mortar of the Five Majors' Theatres Are Outweighed in the Scales by Their Qualitative Significance and Economic Influence in the Motion Picture Industry.

In refusing to grant the remedy of divestiture, the lower Court stressed the superficial fact that the Five Majors own only 17.35%, or 3,137 of an aggregate of 18,076, motion picture theatres in the United States.[28] Clearly, here the grievous error of the lower Court was in failing to give greater weight and due regard to the qualitative, as distinguished from quantitative, significance of the Big Five's affiliated theatres.[29] The judges of the statutory court, it appears, attached more importance to cold brick and mortar than to such highly influential psychological and economic factors as the unusual size, the unique physical character, and the strategic location of such Majors' choice theatres—to say nothing of the extraordinary circumstance that these theatres alone yield more than 70% of the first-run theatre box-office receipts of the entire country. In this connection, the judges below apparently failed to evaluate properly the significance of the triune status of the Big Five as producers, distributors and exhibitors of motion pictures and the highly important fact that the Big Five and the Little Three constitute substantially the entire source of our country's motion pictures.

(b) The Historical Background of Defendants' Film Monopoly.

The court below committed another grievous error in finding that "there is no substantial proof that any of the corporate defendants was organized or has been maintained for the purpose of achieving a national monopoly * * *."[30] Here the Court below has disregarded important facts not only in the record at bar, but in the records of other motion picture cases relating to the monopolistic history of defendants. Adolph Zukor, for instance, and his organization, Famous Players Lasky Corporation, now known as Paramount Pictures, Inc., never even concealed their monopolistic purpose in embarking upon a national theatre acquisition program in 1919.[31] Nor, for that matter, did any of the other corporate defendants and their founders. All the fair inferences from their activities in the film industry impel the conclusion that such corporate defendants were in fact maintained for the purpose of furthering and sustaining a national film monopoly.[32]

31. In 1927, the Federal Trade Commission in 11 F.T.C. 187, 205 found Adolph Zukor and Famous Players Lasky Corporation guilty of furthering and possessing a monopoly. As the Federal Trade Commission said (p. 205): "It was the openly and publicly avowed purpose of said respondents by said policy of theatre ownership and operation, to dominate the entire motion picture industry * * *" Subsequently, when the Federal Trade Commission petitioned the United States Circuit Court of Appeals in the Second Circuit for an enforcement order (57 Fed. 2d 152 [1932], C. C. A., 2nd) the theatre acquisition issue was eliminated.

32. The history of monopolistic purposes and activities of defendants in combination with affiliates and other parties is reflected in the following cases: Re: West Coast Theatres, Inc., (1929), 12 F.T.C. 436, 470, 476-77, 480-89 (Case No. 2); Re: West Coast Theatres, Inc., et al. (1929), 12 F.T.C. 383, 421-431 (Case No. 1); Paramount Famous Lasky Corporation v. *U. (c) Rights of Private Property Vis-a-Vis Transcendental Public Welfare.

The statutory court fell into further error in concluding that "each defendant had a right to build and to own theatres and to exhibit pictures in them".[33] Such determination utterly ignores the overwhelming weight of the evidence demonstrating the qualitative significance of the Majors' strategically located first-run theatres as the bedrock for the maintenance of the dominant position of the Majors in all branches of the motion picture industry.[34] It by-passes the established fact that defendants have utilized their theatres as instrumentalities to exclude independent producers and new theatre operators from substantially the entire exhibition market to the great detriment of the interests of the general public.[35]

Generally speaking, the legal right of any person to acquire, own, and operate private property will be sustained by the courts. That right, however, is not supreme. It is subject to important exceptions in our jurisprudence. One of these exceptions is that "One cannot use his own property so as to injure the rights of others, nor can he use it in such a manner as to offend against public morality, health, or peace, and good order."[36] And this is all the more true where, as in the case at bar, the property is a public forum of the screen and directly relates to so important a medium of communications as the motion picture. As has been previously shown, its use has a strong influence on the moral, intellectual, and esthetic development of our country's millions of movie goers. It may even play a powerful part in preserving our democracy.

Besides, even if the acquisition, the ownership, and the operation of theatres by the Five Majors should be regarded as legal elements of the Majors' vast unlawful combination and monopoly in the motion picture industry, it is an established principle that the courts are empowered to enjoin the legal, as well as the illegal, segments of such entire evil combination and monopoly.

Thus, as succinctly stated in U. S. v. Bausch & Lomb Optical Co., 321 U. S. 707, 724:

> "* * * Equity has power to eradicate the evils of a condemned scheme by prohibition of the use of admittedly valid parts of an invalid whole." (Emphasis ours.)

And as strongly emphasized by this tribunal in granting divestiture relief to plaintiff in U. S. v. Crescent Amusement Co., 323 U. S. 173, 188 (1944):

1, 42; Paramount Pictures, Inc. v. Langer, 23 Fed. Supp. 890, 896 (1938, D. C. N. D.) reversed only for mootness in 306 U. S. 619. The juridical basis of this doctrine is variously expressed by other authorities. Thus, Broom's Legal Maxims, p. 1, states: "Salus Populi Est Suprema Lex. (XII Tables—Bacon, Max., reg. 12)—Regard for the public welfare is the highest law." Thus, Benjamin N. Cardozo, in The Nature of the Judicial Process (1921 Ed.), at page 66, declares: "The final cause of law is the welfare of society. The rule that misses its aim cannot permanently justify its existence * * *."

"* * * The duty of the Court in these cases is 'to frame its decree so as to suppress the unlawful practices and to take such reasonable measures as would preclude their revival'." (Emphasis ours.)

In the case at bar, nothing short of complete divestiture of the Majors' ownership interests in motion picture theatres will constitute assurance of permanently precluding the resuscitation of the Majors' monopolistic evils.

Upon the record before this tribunal, legal niceties concerning private property rights should not be permitted to transcend considerations of general public welfare.

As pointedly promulgated in Motion Picture Patents Co. v. Universal Film Mfg. Co., 243 U. S. 502, 519:

"* * * public interest * * * is more a favorite of the law than is the promotion of private fortunes." (Emphasis ours.)

Nor should the seeming harshness of the remedy of divestiture or any inconvenience resulting therefrom to defendants be considered as a deterrent to decreeing such relief. Having enriched themselves very considerably over a period of many years as a consequence of the film monopoly which defendants furthered through the acquisition and the operation of their motion picture theatres, defendants are in no position to bar the separation of the good from the bad of their unlawful enterprises.

In U. S. v. Crescent Amusement Co., et al., 323 U. S. 173, 189-190, this tribunal granted divestiture relief and said (PP. 189-190):

"* * * Those who violate the Act may not reap the benefits of their violations and avoid an undoing of their unlawful project on the plea of hardship or inconvenience. That principle is adequate here to justify divestiture * * * The proclivity in the past to use that affiliation for an unlawful end warrants effective assurance that no such opportunity will be available in the future.".

Besides, particularly in the light of the historical background of their monopolistic existence and operations,[37] defendants can no longer be expected to initiate and maintain permanently any required effective reforms for the recreation of freedom of trade and ideas in the marketplace. It is highly significant that whenever one of their evil illegal practices in the motion picture industry was eliminated, it was invariably done through the compulsion of judicial decree.[38] Accordingly, the towering financial stature and strength of defendants and their past proclivities to use their extraordinary economic powers to promote the ends of their monopoly, may not now be disregarded.[39]

39. Even during the very period of four years following the entry of the consent decree in 1938 in this action, and while such action was awaiting trial, the Theatre-Owning Majors were avariciously preoccupied with effectuating an unlawful conspiracy and discriminatory stratagem in withholding films from an independent motion picture theatre in Chicago. In Bigelow et al. v. RKO Radio Pictures Inc. et al., 327 U. S. 251, 262-266, petitioners, the owners of the Jackson Park Motion Picture Theatre, complained that RKO, Loew's, Fox, Paramount, Vitagraph Warner Bros., and others, unlawfully conspired and discriminated against petitioners in withholding feature motion pictures for as long as ten weeks after they were exhibited by favored affiliated theatres in the Chicago District. This conspiracy and discrimination occurred in the period "(p. 254) from some date prior to November 1, 1936 to the date that suit was brought, July 28, 1942". It was claimed by petitioners that

As stated by Mr. Justice Benjamin N. Cardozo in U. S. v. Swift & Co., 286 U. S. 106, 116-117:

> "* * * size carries with it an opportunity for abuse that is not to be ignored when the opportunity is proved to have been utilized in the past." (Emphasis ours.)

And as pronounced in Paramount Pictures Inc. v. Langer,[40] 23 Fed. Supp. 890, 900 (1938, D. C. N. D.), reversed only for mootness in 306 U. S. 619:

* * * * *

> "* * * * there is evidence in the record here which justifies an inference of suppression of local competition in states other than North Dakota by producers having affiliated theatres; and the evidence also discloses the existence of the power and the temptation of such producers to engage in practices promotive to monopoly and restraint of trade.

"(P. 254) in consequence they had been subjected to loss of earnings in excess of $120,000 during the five year period from July 27, 1937 to July 27, 1942." This Court found "(P. 256) There was evidence that respondent distributors and exhibitors conspired to give to the distributor-controlled or affiliated theatres preferential playing positions in the release system over the positions allotted to independent competing theatres including that of petitioners with the result that petitioners' theatre was unable to obtain feature films until the first week of 'general release' or ten weeks after the end of the Loop run." Accordingly, this Court sustained a verdict in favor of petitioners for treble damages amounting to $360,000.

40. The Langer case was cited with approval in Great Atlantic & Pacific Tea Co. v. Federal Trade Com'n, 106 Fed. 2d 667, 678 (September 1939, C. C. A. 3rd) cert. den. in 309 U. S. 694.

"It is our opinion that the existence of the unusual power to deal with competitors unfairly, when coupled with the opportunity and the temptation to use that power is probably a sufficient basis for legislative action to prevent the possibility of its exercise. This must certainly be so where there is, in addition, evidence of past aggressions."

(d) The Auction-Bidding System Is No Effective Substitute for Divestiture.

The auction bidding system for pictures and runs as prescribed in the decree of the statutory court[41] is no real effective substitute for divestiture. It is an intricate and cumbersome procedure which is not calculated to place the little independent theatre owner on a real equal competitive plane with the big independent theatre owner or any of the Five Theatre-Owning Majors.

To begin with, no provision is made for the requirement of a fixed ceiling price for each motion picture in accordance with established industry standards as regards the grade of such motion picture and its production cost. Without such a fixed price ceiling for each such picture, the result will be a frenzied race among exhibitors to outbid each other. Of necessity, the highest bid will be a price considerably out of proportion to the intrinsic value of the picture, and that price will most likely be passed on to the general public in the form of exorbitant prices of admission to theatres.

Whenever it suits their purpose, the Five Theatre-Owning Majors will always be in a strong position to outbid any competition of the independents. If the Five Majors incur any losses in the bidding process, they can easily recoup such losses at points where they enjoy monopoly and also by the simple expedient of marking up the price of pictures to independent exhibitors.

And, in the final analysis, the effect of the monopolistic ownership of the Five Majors will remain unchanged. Independent producers will still be excluded from the strategic theatres of the Five Majors and just as certainly from those in surrounding areas of any exhibitors who have been made dependent on these Five Majors as producers and distributors of films. In short, no system of auction bidding is capable of realistically recreating free competitive conditions so that the general public can be assured of enjoying the widest possible diversity in the production and the exhibition of motion pictures.

As has been demenstrated herein,[42] the most effective way of breaking all shackles of dictatorial restraint on the market price of motion pictures is by decreeing divestiture.

(e) Under Recreated Conditions of Free Competition the Strong Likelihood Is That the Independent Successors to the Ownership of the Majors' Theatres Will Give to the General Public Greater Service Than the Majors Ever Did at Any Time.

The statutory Court, however, doubts the ability of a new group of theatre owners to give the general public "as good service as the exhibitors they would have supplanted,"[43] in the event of divorcement.

This misgiving is an absolutely unfounded non sequitur. One of the basic tenets of our American social economy is that freedom of competition is the highest guarantee that those able to survive competition in the market place will furnish to the public satisfactory, if not the best, service and goods. This underlies the purpose of the Sherman Act.[44] In all Anti-Trust cases, the function of the Courts is to destroy unhesitatingly unlawful monopolies and to recreate conditions of free competition and diversity. The Courts may not speculate on the results which might ensue once the forces of competition are set free. They must assume that free competition, in the true American way of life, will operate for the ultimate welfare of the general public.

43. 66 Fed. Supp. 323, 353.

As aptly stressed by this tribunal in Paramount Famous Lasky Corporation et al. v. U. S., 282 U. S. 30, 44:

> " * * * The law is its own measure of right and wrong, of what it permits, or forbids, and the judgment of the courts cannot be set up against it in a supposed accommodation of its policy with the good intentions of parties, and it may be of some good results'. * * " (Emphasis ours.)

Moreover, once the Majors are permanently divorced from their theatres, their independent successors, together with the remaining independent theatre owners, will be truly free to bid for films of independent producers. As a consequence of this, more and more independent producers will be encouraged to enter the exhibition mart without economic fear. And it is precisely the actual entry of more and more of such independent producers which will serve to maintain realistically free competitive conditions throughout the motion picture industry. Of necessity, such free competition will bring greater and greater diversity and qualitative content in the production and the exhibition of movie fare and wider selectivity to the general public. And of necessity it will in turn compel the Majors to produce and distribute better and more diversified films to survive such fair competition. If the successors to the ownership of the affiliated theatres bring about such salutary conditions as they—and not the Majors—are very likely to do, their service to the general public will be inestimable and will certainly surpass that of the Majors at any time.

Conclusion.

In view of all the foregoing considerations, and in the light of the record, the refusal of the statutory court to grant divestiture clearly constitutes an abuse of its judicial discretion. This equitable remedy is an efficacious complement to the auxiliary relief contained in such statutory court's decree. This alone, and no others, separately or combined, will truly serve to bring about a realistic recreation of diversity in filmfare and permanent protection to the rights of the general public under the First Amendment. It should, therefore, be granted in the interests of justice.

The appeals at bar should be disposed of by this tribunal accordingly.

Motion for Leave to File Brief on Behalf of Amicus Curiae

May it please the Court:

The undersigned, as counsel for the Society of Independent Motion Picture Producers, respectfully moves this Honorable Court for leave to file the annexed brief amicus curiae in this case.

1. The United States of America brought this suit against eight defendants and their affiliated companies, charging them with violations of Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act. The Statutory Court below rendered an opinion and made findings of fact and conclusions of law, and final judgment was entered in accordance therewith on the 31st day of December, 1946.

2. The Government filed a petition for appeal in No. 79, which was allowed on February 21, 1947.

3. The members of the Society of Independent Motion Picture Producers are:

Constance Bennett,
Benedict Bogeaus,
Sidney Buchman,
William Cagney,
California Pictures, Inc.
(Howard Hughes),
Charles Chaplin,
Bing Crosby,
Walt Disney,
Federal Films, Inc.
(Boris Morris-William LeBaron),
Edward A. Golden,
Samuel Goldwyn,
Seymour Nebenzal,
Rainbow Productions, Inc.
(Leo McCarey),
Hal Roach,
Charles R. Rogers,
Edward Small,
Andrew Stone,
Story Productions Inc.
(Armand Deutsch),
Hunt Stromberg,
Vanguard Films, Inc.
(David O. Selznick),
Walter Wanger.

4. The members of the Society are all independent producers and are persons or entities who not only dominate financially the production of their own pictures but who have the right to control the distribution thereof. Mr. Keough, a principal officer of the defendant Paramount, testifying in this action, said: "The independent producer usually is the best and most talented man, whether he be a producer or a director or sometimes a writer or sometimes a star, man or woman, and for one reason or another, good to themselves, they go into independent production and nobody has any interest in their venture except as they perhaps provide financing for them." (Record, p. 910; Sten. Minutes, 1269.)

Reference herewith is made to the Society's proposed brief wherein the Society's position has been set forth in full and the effect of the decree on its members as independent producers of motion pictures has been set forth.

5. In the spring of 1945 the Society of Independent Motion Picture Producers made application before Judge Goddard, then presiding alone, to file a brief amicus on the motion brought by the Government for a preliminary injunction against unreasonable clearances pending the trial. This application so to file was opposed by the defendants and after oral argument Judge Goddard granted leave to the Society to file a brief amicus and such brief was filed.

6. On or about the 21st day of October, 1946, after the opinion of the Statutory Court below had been handed down and on a day set for argument on the decree the Society was granted leave among others to file a brief amicus setting forth its position on the proposed decree. Such brief was duly filed and counsel for the Society argued thereon in open court.

7. On or about March 3, 1947 counsel for the Society wrote to the attorneys for all of the defendants and to the Department of Justice representing the United States of America, requesting consent to file a brief amicus in connection with this appeal, and thus more than eight months notice has been given.

8. The Department of Justice, under date of March 5, 1947, responded immediately, granting consent to the filing of a brief by the Society as amicus curiae.

9. On October 17, 1947 page proof of the Society's proposed brief was sent to each of the attorneys for the defendants, again requesting consent on behalf of the Society to file a brief.

10. On November 20, 1947 the final brief was mailed to the attorneys for all of the defendants. This brief differed from the page proof previously sent to the attorneys for the defendants only in very minor respects, mostly typographical. The advices we received from all of the parties are as follows:

As to the United States of America—
Consented on March 5, 1947.

A. The following defendants declined:

(1) Paramount Pictures, Inc. and its subsidiary, Paramount Film Distributing Corporation.

(2) Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation and its subsidiaries R.K.O. Radio Pictures, Inc., Keith-Albee-Orpheum Corporation, R.K.O. Proctor Corporation, R.K.O. Midwest Corporation.

(3) Loew's, Incorporated, by its attorneys, declined and wrote:

"After carefully considering the brief which you have prepared, I am forced to conclude that it is not limited to the facts and argument presented on the present record. Therefore I regret that on behalf of the defendant Loew's, Incorporated whom I represent, I cannot consent to the filing of this brief."

There was no indication by counsel for Loew's, Incorporated as to what part of the Society's proposed brief in its judgment goes outside the record. We respectfully submit that such judgment is invalid.

(4) Columbia Pictures Corporation and its subsidiaries Screen Gems, Inc., Columbia Pictures of Louisiana, Inc.

(5) Universal Corporation and its subsidiaries Universal Pictures Company, Inc., Universal Film Exchanges, Inc., Big U Film Exchange, Inc.

(6) United Artists Corporation.

B. The following defendants have declined by failure to respond to the Society's request:

(1) Warner Brothers Pictures, Inc. and its subsidiaries Warner Brothers Circuit Management Corporation.

(2) Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation and its subsidiary National Theatres Corporation.

(3) On information and belief, the American Theaters Association has intervened in this proceeding.

11. The Statutory Court in its opinion and decree laid its emphasis on the effect of the defendants' practices upon the independent exhibitor. The Society of Independent Motion Picture Producers believes that the defendants' concentration of power constitutes a peril not only to the independent exhibitor but to the independent producer as well and, furthermore, that such concentration of power constitutes a menace to the motion picture industry as a whole, impinging upon the rights of the movie-going public, protected by the First Amendment. It is the contention of the Society that the decree as shaped by the court below is not adequate to restore competition in that it fails to go to the root of the evil, namely, theater ownership by the five major defendants. The Society additionally maintains that the independent producer is entitled to a clarification of the decree so that independent producers, not parties to the action and not guilty of any monopoly practices, will be permitted to distribute their pictures without carrying the burden of the restrictions in the decree directed only to the defendants.

These impacts on the independent motion picture producers and upon the movie-going public are discussed in the attached amicus brief. Although imbedded in the record in this action, neither the Government nor the defendants have heretofore touched upon them more than incidentally. Accordingly, we believe that the attached brief will be of assistance to the Court to the extent that it illuminates aspects of the litigation which are not developed in the briefs of the parties directly affected.

12. Although by reason of the foregoing circumstances, consent of all parties to the litigation has not been obtained as provided in Rule 27, subd. 9 of the Rules of this Court, it is respectfully submitted that the present case affords an appropriate occasion for the exercise of this Court's discretion and undoubted power to receive the Society's amicus brief annexed hereto.

We therefore respectfully urge that the Court grant leave to file the annexed brief which is made part of this motion, on behalf of the Society of Independent Motion Picture Producers as amicus curiae.

BRIEF FOR THE SOCIETY OF INDEPENDENT MOTION PICTURE PRODUCERS AS AMICUS CURIAE

Opinion Below, Jurisdiction, Statute Involved

The Court's attention is respectfully directed to the Government's brief, which fully sets forth the above.

Statement

This brief is filed on behalf of the Society of Independent Motion Picture Producers to present the position of the independent producers, in aid of this court in reviewing the decision and decree of the court below. The Society appeared before the District Court as amicus curiae in connection with the framing of the decree and on a previous preliminary proceeding before Judge Goddard.

A. The Society

The Society of Independent Motion Picture Producers, hereinafter referred to as the "Society" or the "Independent Producers," is a membership corporation organized under the laws of California for the purpose of furthering the art of motion picture production, and protecting the interests of the independent (as opposed to the majors and their subsidiaries) producers of motion pictures. The president of the Society is Donald M. Nelson, and its membership includes: Constance Bennett, Benedict Bogeaus, Sidney Buchman, William Cagney, California Pictures, Inc. (Howard Hughes), Charles Chaplin, Bing Crosby, Walt Disney, Federal Films Inc. (Boris Morris-William LeBaron), Edward A. Golden, Samuel Goldwyn, Seymour Nebenzal, Rainbow Productions, Inc. (Leo McCarey), Hal Roach, Charles R. Rogers, Edward Small, Andrew Stone, Story Productions, Inc. (Armand Deutsch), Hunt Stromberg, Vanguard Films, Inc. (David O. Selznick), Walter Wanger.

Generally speaking, the Society's members are engaged in independently and separately producing motion pictures. Excluding those made by the eight defendants, the independent producers make substantially the balance of all features in the United States. Their productions are normally individually financed either by their own personal capital or by private financing from banks or other lending institutions or individuals.

B. The Independent Producer

The District Court defined an independent producer (in exclusionary terms) as a producer who is not a defendant, or a subsidiary or affiliate of a defendant.[1] Affirmatively, however, and more realistically, an independent producer is one who not only dominates financially the production of his own pictures, but who has the right to control the distribution thereof, and does not restrict the market by either the ownership of theaters or by acting in concert with others.

Because of the domination by the defendants of the market, the independent producers have had no alternative but to distribute their product through the defendants—any one of the five who have been found to have endangered the market by theater ownership, or one of the three who, although they do not own theaters, have been found guilty of restricting the market by patterns of behavior stemming from horizontal combinations. The independent producer has generally distributed through United Artists and in some few instances through R.K.O.

The unique position of the independent producer in the motion picture industry has been accurately described by Mr. Keough,[2] a principal officer of the defendant Paramount: "The independent producer usually is the best and most talented man, whether he be a producer or a director or sometimes a writer or sometimes a star, man or woman, and for one reason or another, good to themselves, they go into independent production and nobody has any interest in their venture except as they perhaps provide financing for them." (Record, p. 910; Sten. Minutes, 1269.)

As Mr. Keough indicated, the independent producer has come to represent the best in the motion picture industry. He is in a real sense the best product of a competitive system, for it must be remembered that the independent cannot rely either on the ownership of vast retail outlets for the marketing of his pictures, or on monopolistic accords such as were found to exist among the defendants. Obviously, therefore, the independent producer of two or three pictures a year has a deeper concern with the merits of his products and a keener eye to public opinion and public acceptance than does the producer of twenty or more pictures, who not only can average out his profits and losses, but who is cushioned against potential production losses by the income from the theaters he owns.

Furthermore, since advances and innovations in the motion picture art are more likely to flow from the studios engaged in producing "custom made" films than from those producing films of a more "mass production" character, the economic health of the independent producer becomes a matter of real concern to the public.

On a quantitative basis, the total number of pictures independently produced by members of the Society is approximately equal to the total production of any one of the "majors".

Finally, to the extent that the independent producers are surviving at all in marketing their product despite the restrictive trade practices and attempts at monopolization of the defendants, they represent a real—perhaps the only real—competitive force in the film industry as contrasted with the defendants who have been found in substantial respects to be acting in monopolistic accord.

C. The Stake of the Independent Producers in this Decree

None of the Society's members is a party to the instant suit. None of them exercises any actual or potential power over the motion picture market by ownership or leasing of theaters. None of them has been accused or found guilty of engaging in any unlawful trade practices or attempts to monopolize.

Since the defendants dominate the distribution and the five major defendants dominate the exhibition of motion pictures in the United States, the decree of the court below necessarily deals with the functioning of the industry as a whole, and serves as a blueprint for its operation. Although the strictures made applicable to the defendants by reason of their theater holdings and horizontal trade practices ought, therefore, not to be applicable to non-theater owning independent producers free of guilt, the independent who must of economic necessity distribute through one of the defendants will be affected by all such restrictive provisions in the decree.

Because of the broad scope of the decree, the court below by silence has thus caused irreparable injury to independent producers. Actually, the court's failure affirmatively to protect the independent producers places them in even a worse competitive position vis-a-vis the defendants than they had occupied prior to the institution of the present action in that some in the industry will not bother to differentiate between defendants who alone are bound by the decree and innocent parties as are the independent producers.

The Society believes that in order to avert unintended and grave injury to its members, and in order effectively to re-establish the conditions of an open competitive market for motion pictures and obtain adequate screen playing time for all worthwhile products and in the interests of the consuming public, the modifications and clarification of the decree it requests should be granted.

D. The Position of the Independent Producer

The independent producer requests modification or clarification of the decree in three essential respects:

(1) The decree should be modified so as to provide for an order directing divestiture of all theaters owned by defendants, and their sale on the open market, that is, dissolution of theater chains by sale to such buyers and in such a manner as will be consistent with the antitrust laws, and will restore competition to the industry.

(2) The decree should be clarified so as not to cast any shadow of doubt on the right of bona fide independents to market their pictures on terms acceptable to exhibitors and to include provisions for clearance, run and price maintenance in the licensing of their own products through the defendants where the independent producer is not guilty of horizontal accords, and does not own any theaters.

(3) The decree should affirmatively state that road shows are free from any restrictions thereon, at least so as to make it clear that the rights of independent producers with respect thereto shall not be interfered with.

POINT I

Nothing short of complete divorcement of exhibition from distribution and dissolution of defendants' exhibition chains will suffice to restore an open competitive market.

The court below found that the defendants' distributor-exhibitor combinations were guilty of monopolization, were destructive of competition, and restrained trade in violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act. It is the contention of the Society that nothing short of divestiture of theater ownership and dissolution of defendants' exhibitors' chains will restore competition and a free market to the industry.

The District Court rejected "total divestiture" as a remedy on the grounds: (1) It "would be injurious to the corporations concerned"; (2) it was unnecessary "at the present time", since the public interest could be protected by mere injunctive relief against the objectionable trade practices and by setting up under the aegis of the court an entirely novel and untried system of marketing of films; and (3) because the defendant exhibitors operated their theaters with "experience and skill" and new supplanting independent exhibitors would be "unlikely for some years" to equal that experience and skill.

(1) The "Injury" to Defendants

The statutory court's concern with the argument that divestiture might prove injurious to these defendants, condemned by it for violating the Sherman Act, is based upon a fundamental misconception of the duty of a court of equity to grant adequate relief for infringement of the antitrust laws. Whether or not such relief would be injurious to guilty defendants is irrelevant. The primary consideration is to fashion a decree which will effectively serve to carry out the purpose of the Act, i. e., to restore competitive conditions to the industry.

If divestiture will be a burden to the defendants, it is a burden which they who violated the law must carry. They cannot now be heard to complain.

In the Crescent Amusement case, 323 U. S. 173, the same argument was advanced by the defendants against the divestiture provisions of that decree. This court there held that (p. 189):

> "Those who violate the act may not reap the benefits of their violations and avoid an undoing of their unlawful project on the plea of hardship or inconvenience. * * * Hence, we do not think the District Court abused its discretion in failing to limit the relief to an injunction against future violations. There is no reason why the protection of the public interest should depend solely on that somewhat cumbersome procedure when another effective one is available."

The fact situation before the Court in the Crescent case was, of course, strikingly analogous to one facet of the situation presented by the instant case, and the language of the Court above may fully and accurately be applied in that respect to the instant case.

More recently, in the National Lead case, (June 1947), 91 L. Ed. (S. Ct.) 1438, 1463 (1947), Mr. Justice Douglas observed in a dissenting opinion that:

> "The task of putting an end to monopolistic practices and restoring competition is one of magnitude and complexity; Congress has authorized use of the broadest powers of equity to cope with it. * * * And its powers under the antitrust laws, though not specifically enumerated, are ample to thwart the plans of those who would build illegal empires, no matter how imaginative their undertakings or subtle their techniques. The power of the court is not limited to the restraint of future transgressions. The impairment of property rights is no barrier to the fashioning of a decree which will grant effective relief. United States v. Union P. R. Co., 226 U. Mr. Justice Douglas went on to say:

"But beyond that is the effect on the industry. Here defendants have been in a commanding and impregnable position. They have dominated the field and suppressed competition. If competition is to be restored strong measures must be adopted to provide the maximum opportunity for new ventures to compete with the established giants of the industry."

Although in the National Lead case the District Court refused to grant divestiture as a remedy, this Court expressly rested its refusal on the theory that, under the particular facts of that case, divestiture would not improve the competitive pattern of the industry.

> "Presumably, the requested divestiture would be for the purpose of providing four instead of two independent major competing plants in the titanium pigment industry. However, there is no showing whether or not the two licensees * * * may not be able to develop, under the decree, even more substantial competition against National Lead and Dupont than would new concerns operating the divested plants * * *" (at 1456).

The Court pointed out that divestiture in that particular case would amount only to divesting each of the two largest competitors of one of its principal plants.

The defendants can thus find no comfort in attempting to analogize the National Lead case to the case at bar. It would seem that the opinion of Mr. Justice Douglas is clearly appropriate here and it is submitted that the majority of the Court would adopt the rationale of the dissent of Mr. Justice Douglas as applied to the facts in the instant case.

We now turn to the second reason advanced by the court for refusing to grant divestiture, i.e. that divestiture was not a "necessary" remedy "at the present time", and that the public interest could adequately be protected by mere injunctive relief against certain specified trade practices when coupled with auction bidding as superimposed on the industry by the court below.

(2) The "Necessity" of Divestiture and the Public Interest

The record demonstrates a compelling need for relief by way of divestiture. The adequacy of a decree in an antitrust suit is measured by its effectiveness in restoring competition, in dissipating the consequences of restraint and monopolization, and in thereby serving and protecting the public interest.

In the instant case, the statutory court has found the defendants guilty of attempting to monopolize, of erecting artificial barriers to free and open competition, and of engendering predatory practices which stifled competition. The industry in which these illegal acts were committed is a "communication of ideas" industry,—an industry charged not only with the function of entertaining but of enlightening, educating, and informing the people as well.[3] The peril to our continued existence as a democracy springing from the threat of control of so vital an industry by an aggregate of economic power in the hands of a few is obvious. Certainly if we are to be zealous in protecting freedom of the press and of the radio, we must be no less vigilant in assuring a free, open and competitive movie industry. The significant character of the industry here involved and the deep public interest constitute a graver threat than in the case of almost any other industry. In the words of Mr. Justice Frankfurter we are dealing not with "peanuts and potatoes" but with ideas and opinions —with the very life-stream of a democracy—and the courts in such a case, as distinguished from all others, are doubly charged with the positive duty of granting complete and stringent and effective relief.

The only remedy that will serve the purpose, the only relief that will effectively restore economic freedom to this important industry, is divestiture. In concerning itself with the inconvenience to the defendants (discussed supra) and with the defendants' qualms about the "necessity" for divestiture, the court below not only overlooked the vital character of the industry involved, but also misconceived the import of the evidence presented by the government. For the record amply demonstrates that the trade practices outlawed by the court's decree were but symptomatic of a deeper fault—the fusion of highly integrated horizontal and vertical combinations of the defendant distributor-exhibitors, arising out of their theater-ownership. Common control, unity of purpose, and unity of action, springing from ownership of theaters made the conspiracy efficient and dangerous.

[3] "The motion picture commenced as a novel and pleasing type of entertainment but it has evolved into an important social and cultural force. In some senses it provides a common denominator to the feelings and aspirations of an entire people. Its importance must then be measured in terms other than the conventional one of dollars and cents". Evans & Bertrand, The Motion Picture Industry: A Pattern of Control, T.N.E.C. Monograph 43, at p. 56.

It follows, therefore, that because (a) the highly significant character of the motion picture industry makes it doubly important to keep it a free industry, both for statutory and constitutional reasons, and (b) the root of the threat to competition in that industry lies in the ownership of the theaters by defendants, the only adequate remedy is divestiture. The statutory court, in refusing to grant such relief, after finding infringement of the Sherman Act, failed thereby to grant the only sufficient, and necessary, remedy.

(a) The Vital Character of the Industry and the First Amendment

As has been indicated above, we are dealing here with a "First Amendment commodity". Motion pictures cannot be treated differently from the radio or the press when the Sherman Act is involved. There can be little doubt that today this Court would apply the First Amendment to protect the freedom of the screen as well as the freedom of the air and the freedom of the press.[4]

The Court has already indicated its great concern as to the standards to be applied to two "First Amendment commodities," namely, radio and the press, when threatened with monopoly and restrictive trade practices. Thus, Mr. Justice Black, writing for the majority in United States of America v. Associated Press, 326 U. S. 1, 20, said:

> "The First Amendment, far from providing an argument against application of the Sherman Act, here provides powerful reasons to the contrary. That Amendment rests on the assumption that the widest possible dissemination of opinion from diverse and antagonistic sources is essential to the welfare of the public, that a free press is a condition of a free society. Surely a command that the government itself shall not impede the free flow of ideas does not afford non-governmental combines a refuge if they impose restraints upon that constitutionally guaranteed freedom." (Italics added.)

In that same case, Mr. Justice Frankfurter observed that (p. 28):

> "Truth and understanding are not wares like peanuts and potatoes. And so, the incidence of restraints upon the promotion of truths through denial of access to the basis for understanding calls into play considerations very different from comparable restraints in a cooperative enterprise having merely a commercial aspect. I find myself entirely in agreement with Judge Learned Hand that 'neither exclusively, nor even primarily are the interests of the newspaper industry conclusive; for that industry serves one of the most vital of all general interests: the dissemination of news from as many different sources, and with as many different facets and colors as is possible. That interest is closely akin to, if indeed it is not the same as, the interest protected by the First Amendment; it presupposes that right conclusions are more likely to be gathered out of a multitude of tongues, than through any kind of authoritative selection. To many this is, and always will be, folly; but we have staked upon it our all.'" (Italics added.)

[4] Professor Chafee in his treatise "Free Speech in the United States" (1942 Ed.) said (p. 534): "All the objections to a press censorship apply as well to film censorship, especially in an age when more persons probably go to the movies than read books." (See also, page 535.)

The words of Mr. Justice Murphy, in the radio monopoly case, appraising the importance of radio broadcasting (with which appraisal the majority, of course, was not in disagreement) may be applied in haec verba to motion pictures:

"Although radio broadcasting [the motion picture] like the press is generally conducted on a commercial basis, it is not an ordinary business activity like the selling of securities or the marketing of electrical power. In the dissemination of information and opinion, radio [the motion picture] has assumed a position of commanding importance, rivalling the press and the pulpit * * * because of its vast potentialities as a medium of communication, discussion and propaganda the character and extent of control that should be exercised over it by the government is a matter of deep and vital concern." National Broadcasting Company v. United States, 319 U. S. 190, 228 (1943).

Surely no court can find a significant distinction between Bob Hope over the radio, Bob Hope in the movies and Bob Hope between the covers of the book, I Never Left Home; between the weekly summary of the news in Time Magazine as compared with the motion picture March of Time and the same March of Time over the air; between Life With Father as a best selling magazine story and Life With Father as a best selling motion picture; between the story of Woodrow Wilson as it appears between the covers of a book and the story of Woodrow Wilson as it is depicted on the screen; between a newscast, a newspaper, and a newsreel.

There is, therefore, no justification, in logic, reason or law, for treating motion pictures any differently from radio and the press. And where there is danger of monopolistic control over any one of these media of communication, not only are the antitrust laws brought into play, but the Constitution as well.

For in terms of the radio, the press, and the movies, the constitutional guarantees of free speech and free press have meaning only if there exists the greatest possible diversity of control over these three pipe-lines into the national market-place of thought. Concentrated control of these opinion-forming information-disseminating sources may well, as here, frustrate the vital guarantees of the First Amendment. For these reasons, those who traffic in ideas must be held to the highest standards of competitive behavior and no regard should be given in this day and age to the argument that the movies are merely entertainment as if such entertainment could ever be divorced from its educational impact.

It must be remembered that the primary public interest lies not in the direction of bigger and better equipped theaters but rather in greater diversification, and in a greater choice of motion pictures. As in radio and the press, the public interest can best be served by maintaining free and open channels carrying new, diverse, antagonistic, and more ideas to the market-place. This is the valid essence of free enterprise.

The court below, therefore, erred in denying the remedy of divestiture. Especially is this so, since the record amply demonstrates that such relief would be the only effective relief.

(b) The Root of the Evil Is the Economic Power Stemming from Theater Ownership.

The court below, apparently convinced of the existence of a monopoly but only in the form of monopolistic horizontal trade practices which it thought could be excised from the industry pattern, misconceived the import of some of the evidence offered by the Government. The Statutory Court said (66 Fed. Sup. 323, 353):

> "In the year 1945 there were about 18,076 motion picture theatres in the United States, of which the five major defendants had interests in 3,137, or 17.35%."
>
> "It would seem unlikely that theatre owners having an aggregate interest of little more than one-sixth of all the theatres in the United States are exercising such a monopoly of the motion picture business that they should be subjected to the drastic remedy of complete divestiture in order to effect a proper degree to free competition. It is only in certain localities, and not in general, that an ownership of even first run theatres approximates monopolistic existence."

Despite the above, the fact (as supported by the record) remains that the dominant position of the defendants is the result of a geometric cumulation of power flowing from (1) their ownership of key theaters; (2) their domination of the distribution level, and (3) their horizontal agreements and other restrictive trade practices. It is, however, the ownership of theaters which plays the decisive role in the entire pattern of controls and is the springboard for accords on distribution. The deals made at distribution levels take on reality only because the deals relate to theaters owned by the defendants. Any independent who wishes to survive can do so only on defendants' terms, and even then, only as a "second-class citizen" in the industry. That the independent producer survives at all is a great compliment to his product which can only be exhibited in today's market controlled by the defendants.

The most important item of evidence in the record[5] which must be considered in connection with the court's hypothesis and which was completely overlooked, thereby rendering the court's conclusion fallacious, is that the 3,137 theaters owned by the five major defendants produce more than 45% of the United States' gross return of a given picture. (See Appendix for complete chart, Table A, supporting the foregoing facts and constructed from record evidence.)

In other words, the five major defendants themselves, in one-sixth of all the theaters in the United States, have obtained a superior economic strategic position over all other producers by thus assuring to themselves playing time in theaters substantially guaranteeing more than 45% of the entire domestic return of the picture. The facts become even more significant when further broken down. For the most part the five major defendants have confined their theater holdings to the larger populated cities, where they generally control the first run theaters. In all but five of the forty-nine cities with populations from 100,000 to 200,000 (for the 1943-1944 season) first run rentals accounted for as high as from 70% to 90% of the total theater rentals in the city (Exhibit F-21). This is the real power of the five major defendants. They control the big theaters of this country, producing the lion's share of the gross return of most pictures. This power remains, assuming that every monopolistic horizontal trade practice struck down by the statutory court is sustained by this Court. This power goes even beyond the startling test of dollars because these theaters owned by the five major defendants are the choice theaters in the land and are looked upon as setting the national pattern of exhibition of all motion pictures in the United States, the influence of which is carried down through exhibition at all subsequent runs and at all prices.

The independent producer does not own theaters nor does he have a distribution system. He exists as the only creative force competitive to the defendants. He will continue to operate under a constant burden so long as the defendants continue to own and run their own theaters. For without divestiture, the defendants will be left with as much power to control the market as they possessed before the decree. In the Schine and Crescent cases, the courts have condemned analogous power through theater ownership even though not wedded to distribution controls. We, of course, are not concerned with the so called "show case" theater where a producer may legitimately show his own product exclusively at first run.

Whether there be future horizontal agreements or not, the simple fact remains that if the major defendants are permitted to retain ownership of theaters which form a part of the bloc of 3,137, each defendant will inevitably, as in the past, use its part of that bloc for the benefit of itself and the four other theater-owning defendants; in this way each will obtain assured playing time within the 3,137 theaters owned by the five major defendants. For example in the 1943-44 season the five major defendants in the operation of their theaters each paid in excess of 71% of its total annual rental payments in its own theaters to itself and the four other theater-owning defendants for features. The totals in each case paid to all five major defendants were: R.K.O. 74.3%; Fox 78.2%; Warners 76.6%; Paramount 81.8%; and Loew's 71.4%.

(See Appendix for complete chart, Table B.) In this way, each defendant will be enabled to rid itself of its inferior pictures by licensing to the defendants' own theaters; in this way, each of the five defendants is given a "cushion", a guarantee against the risks of competition, and an enormous strategic advantage over all other producers. The president of R.K.O., Mr. N. P. Rathvon, in his frank testimony amply demonstrates the accuracy of these conclusions when he testified (Record page 1622; Sten. Minutes 2224):

> "In the first place, if you have got an unsuccessful picture, your first-run outlets that you control let it get into the flow of distribution and that is very important, because if you have an unsuccessful picture and your first-run exhibitor has no responsibility to you, you are foreclosed from that whole territory if you fail to get it into first-run theaters. So it is, for your unsuccessful pictures, it gives you a chance to get some revenue back because you forced it into the flow of distribution." (Italics added.)

The word "forced" used by Rathvon in his testimony is no accident. It means the power obtained by R.K.O. through its ownership or control of 103 choice theaters in the United States.[6] No one denies that R.K.O., if it

[6] The testimony of Mr. Rathvon indicates the purpose for which R. K. O. controls its theatres. The creation of vertical power through control of consumer outlets was considered by this Court with respect to such expansion to meet normal business needs as distinguished from vertical control expansion for purposes of domination of the market. See United States of America v. Yellow Cab Co., et al., 91 L. Ed. 1594, page 1601, where it was said: "The theory of the complaint, to borrow language from United States v. Reading Co. 253 US 26, 57, 64 L ed 760, 778, 40 S Ct 425, is that 'dominating power' over the cab operating companies 'was not obtained by normal expansion to meet the demands of a business growing as a result of superior and enterprising management, but by deliberate, calculated purchase for control.' If that theory is borne out in this case by the evidence, coupled with proof of an undue restraint of interstate trade, a plain violation of the Act has occurred. Cf. United States v. Crescent Amusement Co. 323 US 173, 189, 89 L ed 160, 171, 65 S Ct 254."

so desired, could properly use its own theaters for its own product exclusively, but that it would not or could not do because it does not have enough product to service its own theaters and the revenue from the theaters would then not be sufficient. When Mr. Rathvon says "forced into distribution" he means that R.K.O. uses its 103 theaters so as to force a position for R.K.O. pictures, good, bad or indifferent, into some or all of the theaters owned by the four other theater owning defendants who all use their theaters similarly. R.K.O.'s position as put by Mr. Rathvon obviously is the same as the four other major defendants as evidenced by their interrogatories heretofore referred to, which showed that in the 1943-1944 season in the operation of their theaters, each paid in excess of 71% of the total rental paid by the theaters owned by each of the defendants to itself and the other theater-owning defendants.

The bloc of theaters, numbering 3,137, owned by the five major defendants produces the cream of the motion picture income in the United States. It is situated so as to control the key cities and market. It, therefore, gives the five defendants the power to dominate the industry; it gives the defendants the power to exclude ideas from the market-place;[7] it gives the defendants the power to exclude competitors from the market-place, for any independent producer must necessarily show his pictures in some, if not a substantial number, of the defendants' theaters to come out whole on a picture; most important it has taken away from the public its right to select which picture it thinks is best and which picture it wishes to see, and the court's decree leaves this concentration of power unimpaired.

[7] In Marsh v. Alabama, 326 U. S. 501, 507-9 (1946), this Court held that: "* * * certainly the corporation can no more deprive people of freedom of press and religion than it can discriminate against commerce." The Court further observed that: "Whether a corporation or a municipality owns or possesses the town the public in either case has an identical interest in the functioning of the community in such manner that the channels of communication remain free. * * * In our view the circumstance that the property rights to the premises where the deprivation of liberty, here involved, took place, were held by others than the public, is not sufficient to justify the State's permitting a corporation to govern a community of citizens so as to restrict their fundamental liberties, and the enforcement of such restraint by the application of a state statute.

Thus, a free competitive market cannot be restored to the industry until exhibition has been divorced from distribution; until the superior economic position accruing to defendants from their ownership of theaters, is dissipated.

Finally, even assuming for the purposes of this argument that there were no proof of monopoly in ownership of theaters, alone, this court has stated that the Sherman Act requires the removal of an innocent part of an industry if tied in with illegal restraints. In the Associated Press case, Mr. Justice Douglas said (p. 24):

> "For it is well settled that a feature of an illegal restraint of trade, which is innocent by itself and which may be lawfully used if independently established, may be uprooted along with other parts of an illegal arrangement" (citing the Ethyl and Univis cases).

Here, even assuming arguendo that ownership of theaters by defendants was "innocent by itself", the fact remains that the illegal restraining trade practices were made possible and effective as a result of theater ownership, and that the two are so inextricably interwoven that the one—theater ownership—should be "uprooted along with the other parts of [the] illegal arrangements"—the enjoined trade practices.

(c) The Defendants' Efficiency Argument

One of the factors impelling the court below to accept the position that divestiture was unnecessary at this time to protect the public interest was the argument that the majors run their theaters efficiently; they "have demonstrated experience and skill in operating what must be regarded as in general the largest and best equipped theaters." The court's conclusion against divestiture because of the efficiency shown by the defendants in their operations of theaters is irrelevant. Monopolists always claim to be efficient.

An examination of the voluminous record here reveals no substantial evidence to support the contention that out of a total of 18,076 theaters in the United States, the 3,137 owned by the major defendants are "larger, best equipped", more skillfully and efficiently operated or that others do not do as good or better social jobs tested on this meager level. However, even assuming this to be true, the court itself, with an eye cocked in the direction of public interest, stated that divestiture would create "a new set of theater owners which would be quite unlikely for some years to give the public as good service as the exhibitors they would have supplanted * * *". Nowhere does the record afford support for this latter assertion either, nor is there any evidence which measures service in terms of variety of pictures exhibited.

The court thus implies that independent exhibitor competition could in a few years render as good service as that provided by the majors, but it again assumes the unproven contention that independent exhibition does not do so today. The statutory court seemed to appraise the public interest in terms of the physical appointments in defendants' theaters. It is an extremely narrow view that permits an unhealthy restricting power to remain alive in the market-place of ideas, in return for the assumed physical convenience of the public for a few years. This defense of monopoly, which may be called the "plush seat defense" should have been disregarded completely. In any event the court should have balanced off the superior (if such they are) brick and mortar of defendants' theaters against the danger of continuing the power of the major defendants to restrict and limit the number and quality and kind of pictures. It is dubious whether this finding—a finding based on physical convenience or even efficiency—can be said to have any validity in the absence of a finding of a greater offer by defendants of diversity of product to movie audiences. Plush seats or rococo walls cannot make up for limitations of the product shown in theaters; wide lobbies are a poor substitute for a narrowed area of selectivity for consumers.

(d) "Competitive Bidding"

The court below sought to dispose of the plight of the independent exhibitor by the imposition of a new method of doing business in the motion picture world—the so-called "competitive bidding" system. The independent exhibitor has in the court below strenuously objected to this method of doing business.

This device is basically objectionable because it places the operations of a large business under the aegis of the court.[8] It is further objectionable because it harms the independent exhibitor, the very one whom it seeks to protect. No independent can out-bid the concentrated economic power represented by any one of the defendants who, too, will be bidding for product for its theaters and the independent exhibitor may thus well be frozen out of the market. Furthermore, in permitting the defendants to retain their theaters, they are given a ready market for their own pictures and a source of supply which the independent exhibitor does not have.

[8] See U. S. v. Pullman Co., 64 F. Supp. 108, 110 where the court stated:

"We take it that the judgment of a court under the Sherman Law is not to substitute the judicial judgment for that of the proprietors of the country's business enterprises. We think it is the court's task to strike at monopolistic practices when it finds them to exist and then leave it to competitive business freed from monopoly, to take advantage of the freedom to profit itself and incidentally benefit the public."

Motion pictures are a rare commodity. Over the past few years the annual production by all producers in the United States has averaged between 300 and 400 feature films. Many theaters running double features and requiring more than one change a week need upwards of 200 of these pictures annually. Where one of the major defendants has to bid for outside pictures, it goes without saying, that with its virtually unlimited resources it can easily afford to make a more substantial bid for a questionable picture, and take a loss in case of bad judgment; the independent exhibitor can ill afford any such losses. The defendants, however, can afford to further stifle competition by buying up the more popular product in order to put competitive theaters at a disadvantage. The theater owner who does not produce pictures cannot average out a theater loss against a non-existent production profit.

The proposed bidding system and the criteria set down by the court for its operation, will create constant dispute between the major defendants and the independent exhibitors. Arbitration is suggested but, of course, cannot be compelled, and endless litigation seems to be indicated and inferentially invited.

The court below apparently admits that its own concept of the marketing of films—by the auction block principle—is less than self-operating. It admits that prices and terms of marketing will not find their proper levels by the free play of bids and offers. It admits that arbitration—influenced by court enforcement practices—is needed to carry into effective use the novel auction plan conceived.

Finally, "competitive bidding" cannot be competitive in a true sense where a concentration of economic power, arising from theater ownership, continues to exist. Inevitably, the market will be dominated by "unequal", or strategically superior, buyers—the theater-owning defendants.

(e) Conclusion and Summary

The touchstone of effective enforcement of the antitrust laws lies in the granting of effective remedies and adequate relief. In many of the complex industrial situations which seem to characterize modern economic life—where the infringement of the antitrust laws goes to the heart of the industrial organization in the particular market—basic changes cannot be accomplished by ordinary injunctive or "cease and desist relief".[9] This is especially so where as in the instant case the continuing threat to competition lies in the size and integration of the units involved, and their relationship to each other and the market.

If the Sherman Act is to be made effective in those cases where the fault lies with the highly integrated organization of the industry, as here, then adequate relief by the courts must be directed against such integration. There is no merit in the ceremony of finding an infringement of [9] It has come to be widely recognized that the Department of Justice, and the courts, have had great difficulty in framing and enforcing effective decrees. Where the courts have surrendered to caution and entered decrees merely containing prohibitions against specific trade practices, subsequent difficulties have revealed that such measures are rarely successful since they do not attack the source of the evil (see 56 Yale L. J. 77, 78-81).

ants and their licensees stating the minimum admission prices which licensees are required to maintain in showing the distributors' pictures in the areas concerned. The agreements are not only between the distributor-defendants and other defendants owning theatres, but also between the distributor-defendants and independent theatre owners. A correlation of these agreements shows that in many instances the minimum prices set forth in the license agreements by the various defendants are in substantial conformity. Indeed, it is conceded in the joint brief filed on behalf of Loew's, Paramount, Warner, RKO and Twentieth Century-Fox that the admission prices included in licenses of the various distributor-defendants are in general uniform, being the usual admission prices currently charged by the exhibitors. At pages 31-2 of the joint brief it is stated:

> "The testimony shows that it is the general practice of all the distributors, whether dealing with independent exhibitors or affiliated ones, to include a provision in the license agreement that the exhibitor shall not charge less than a specified minimum admission price during the exhibition of the particular picture or pictures licensed. * * * The minimum admission price included in the license is not one which the distributor dictates, but is the usual admission price currently charged by the exhibitor. (R. 433, 718, 968, 999, 1382-3). It is the practice of exhibitors to charge the same scale of admission prices over a period of time and not to change them according to whose pictures are being exhibited or according to any fluctuations in the type of picture."

A similar statement is made at page 18 of the brief of Columbia, and the brief of United Artists and Universal appears to argue on the same assumption at pages 24-39.

It does not seem important whether the distributor was the more controlling factor in determining the minimum admission prices. Whether it was such a factor or merely acceded to the customary prices of the exhibitors, in either event there was a general arrangement of fixing prices in which both distributors and exhibitors were involved. But it is plain that the distributor did more than accede to existing price schedules.[4] The licenses required them to be maintained under severe penalties for infraction, and the evidence shows that the distributors in the case of exceptional features, where not satisfied with current prices, would refuse to grant licenses unless the prices were raised.[5] More-

[4] Reagan, vice-president in charge of distribution and sales for Paramount, testified as follows:

"Q. Well, does that (the admission price) fix his right to particular run or to clearance? A. It would have an influence upon the run and clearance, yes, sir."

"Q. Why would you be interested in the minimum admission price or the admission price charged by the exhibitor in connection with determining what run you would negotiate for? A. Because the admission price that he charges determines the film rental that I can earn for my pictures." Record pp. 718-9.

[5] Testimony of John J. Friedl, president of Minnesota Amusement Company—the stock of which is owned by Paramount, was as follows:

"Q. Are there occasional instances of special attractions where there is a negotiation as to a higher admission price with the distributor? A. That has come up on several occasions. In the case of the picture 'Woodrow Wilson', and several other pictures, they have been released by the distributors as road show attractions, and in those cases the distributors insisted upon road show prices, and it was the option of the purchaser, or the theatre, to buy or not to buy those pictures at those prices; but if he expected to play the picture at that time, he would have to charge such admission price.

"Q. And if he was not willing to advance his admission price to meet the distributor's terms, he had the opportunity to play this picture on regular run, is that right? A. At a later date, that is correct.

"Q. Is the provision for that minimum admission price included not only in license contracts for first-run exhibition but also for subsequent-run exhibition? A. Yes, I think it applies in all cases.

"Q. Is it included in license contracts for percentage pictures and also for flat rental pictures? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. Where the admission price is included for subsequent-run exhibition, does your answer with respect to who determines the admission price apply to that as well? A. That is correct. But, of course, it is reasonable to assume, to understand, that in setting our admission prices, we do not do that on an arbitrary basis because it is reasonable to expect that the larger theatres playing the first-runs over, the distributors, when licensing on a percentage basis, were interested in the prices charged and even when licensing for a flat rental were interested in admission prices to be charged for subsequent runs which they might license on a percentage basis. Likewise all of the five major defendants had a definite interest in keeping up prices in any given territory in which they owned theatres, and this interest they were safeguarding by fixing minimum prices in their licenses when distributing their films to independent exhibitors in those areas. Even if the licenses were at a flat rate, a failure to require their licensees to maintain fixed prices would leave them free by lowering the current charge to decrease through competition the income in the licensors' own theatres in the neighborhood. The whole system presupposed a fixing of prices by all parties concerned in all competitive areas.

The similarity of specified minimum prices prescribed for the same theatres in the distributor-defendants' contracts of license is shown by the following table collated from exhibits in evidence.[6] The exhibits used to prepare the table contained answers of the defendants to plaintiff's interrogatories about the first block of five features licensed for the 1943-44 season by each of the five major distributor-defendants, and about the first five pictures licensed by each of the three minor defendants, and about that picture of each defendant which during the season received the most billings in the United States.

would get the maximum price for the protection of the distributor and the producer. And in the secondary houses the prices are less.

"Q. That is, generally speaking, the first-run houses charge a higher price than subsequent-run, and then the prices step down among the runs? A. That is correct." Record p. 1000.

[6] This table is derived from Plaintiff's Exhibits 41, 42, 57 (1-49), 82, 94, 126, 127, 128, 139, 365, 369. In most of the exhibits there was no indication as to whether the admission price given included or excluded taxes. When this information was given in the exhibits, it is stated in the table as "tax incl.", or "tax excl." The word "none" is used to mean that though a license was in evidence, no admission price was specifically stated in the contract, either through inadvertence or on the understanding that the admission prices currently being charged or contained in previous licenses would be continued. Record pp. 433, 724, 782, 1082, 1211. The symbol "x" is used to indicate that no license of that distributor for that particular theatre was in evidence.

It is apparent from the foregoing that there was great similarity and in many cases identity in the minimum prices fixed for the same theatre in the licenses of all the defendants. Where there was a marked difference in price, as for example in the admissions specified by RKO, Columbia and Universal, in a theatre in Charleston, South Carolina, it is likely to have been due to the showing of a picture of a different class from the others, or upon a different run.

Such uniformity of action spells a deliberately unlawful system, the existence of which is not dispelled by the testimony of interested witnesses that one distributor does not know what another distributor is doing; and there can, in our opinion, be no reasonable inference that the defendants are not all planning to fix minimum prices to which their licensees must adhere. See Record p. 1322.

In addition, several of the exhibits disclose operating agreements between the five distributor-defendants who are also theatre owners, or between them and independent theatre owners in which joint operation of the theatres covered by the agreements is provided and minimum admission prices to be charged are either stated therein, or are to be jointly determined by other means. Apparently those particular price fixing agreements do not involve the three minor defendants or their subsidiaries. For example, in Plaintiff's Exh. 220 there are agreements between subsidiaries of Loew's and Warner, covering the period of May 5, 1938 to August 31, 1947, according to which the admission prices for three theatres in Pittsburgh—two of Warner and one of Loew's—are to be fixed by a joint committee. In Plaintiff's Exh. 218, an agreement between Warner and Paramount provides that from March 1, 1936, to August 31, 1953, two theatres previously operated by Warner, and one theatre previously operated by Paramount in Hammond, Indiana, should be managed by Warner Bros. Circuit Management Corporation and the then present scale of admission prices maintained. By other agreements in Plaintiff's Exh. 219, RKO and Warner provided for joint operation from August 27, 1937, to August 31, 1950, of five theatres in Cleveland—three of RKO and two of Warner—for which minimum prices are to be determined by a joint operating committee. See also, e.g., Plaintiff's

Exh. 229 (Warner and independent); Exh. 213 (Loew's and independents); Exh. 202 (RKO and independent); Exhs. 226, 326a (Paramount, Warner, and independent); Exh. 223 (Warner and independent); Exh. 386 (Paramount, RKO and independent); Exhs. 238, 239 (Fox and independents); Exh. 387 (Paramount, RKO and independent); Exh. 206 (RKO and Paramount); Exh. 221 (Warner and Paramount); Exh. 209 (RKO and Paramount); Exh. 205 (Paramount and independent). These agreements show the express intent of the major defendants to maintain prices at artificial levels.

As further evidence of a conspiracy among the distributors to fix prices, we find master agreements and franchises between various of the defendants in their capacities as distributors and various of the defendants in their capacities as exhibitors. These contracts stipulate minimum admission prices often for dozens of theatres owned by an exhibitor-defendant in a particular area of the United States. Loew's as distributor, for example, fixed minimum prices for nearly all of Paramount's 133 theatres in Florida in an agreement covering the 1943-44 season. Plaintiff's Exh. 57 (11). In the Chicago area Loew's again as distributor specified prices in a single agreement for upwards of 50 theatres owned by a Paramount subsidiary, Balaban & Katz Corporation. Plaintiff's Exhs. 250, 173. United Artists as distributor also specified prices for the Balaban & Katz theatres in Chicago for the 1941-42 season. Plaintiff's Exh. 369 (6). Similarly, Loew's specified prices for the entire Warner circuit of theatres for the 1943-44 season, Plaintiff's Exh. 57 (8-10, 21-2, 30, 32, 35, 38, 48); for the same season United Artists specified prices for five RKO theatres in Cincinnati, Plaintiff's Exh. 274; Paramount for seven RKO theatres in Cincinnati, Plaintiff's Exh. 240; Loew's for the same seven RKO theatres in Cincinnati, Plaintiff's Exh. 248; Warner for forty or more RKO theatres in Greater New York, Plaintiff's Exh. 126; Loew's for six Fox theatres in Los Angeles County, Plaintiff's Exh. 249; Warner for subsequent run Paramount theatres in Detroit and Birmingham, Michigan, Plaintiff's Exh. 244.

A master agreement between United Artists as distributor and Fox as exhibitor for the season 1938-39 covered distribution of pictures of five independent producers in Fox theatre circuits in Los Angeles, San Francisco, Salt Lake City, St. Louis, Milwaukee, Omaha, Denver, and other cities, all on a percentage basis. It contained the following clause:

> "Where pictures are licensed on a percentage rental basis the scale of admission prices to be not less than the scale of admission prices charged to view pictures of comparable quality exhibited by the exhibitor and distributed by distributors other than United Artists."

The foregoing quotation shows an acquiescence of United Artists in admission prices fixed by any other distributor and an adherence to those prices in its own licenses. Plaintiff's Exh. 199.

A franchise agreement between Universal Corporation as distributor and Interstate Theatres, Inc., and Texas Consolidated Theatres, Inc., for the seasons 1941-44 is similar. Plaintiff's Exh. 261. In each of the two latter companies Paramount had a 50% interest. The franchise covered pictures distributed by Universal to the Theatres of the two licensees and contained the ordinary provisions for penalties if minimum admission prices were not maintained. See note 2 supra. While no minimum prices were specified in the agreements it is not really questioned that in such circumstances the current prices were implied as part of the contract. See Record pp. 433, 724; 782, 1082, 1210-11.

There is also in evidence a franchise agreement between Columbia Pictures Corporation as distributor and Marcus Loew Booking Agency, a Loew's subsidiary, for the seasons 1944-46 covering pictures distributed to Loew's Metropolitan New York Circuit. Plaintiff's Exh. 471. Minimum admission prices were not specified, but, as in other cases, were implied.

Licenses granted by one defendant to another for exhibition in only one theatre, while less striking evidence of conspiracy than the above master agreements and franchises, disclose the same inter-relationship among the defendants. Each of the five major defendants as a theatre-owning exhibitor has been licensed by the other seven defendants as distributors to exhibit the pictures of the latter at specified minimum prices. RKO, for example, as a theatre-owner, has been granted licenses with price restrictions by the other defendant-distributors. In turn, RKO, being itself a distributor, has granted similar licenses to the other four exhibiting defendants. We think that RKO, Loew's, Warner, Paramount and Fox, in granting and accepting licenses with minimum prices specified, have among themselves engaged in a national system to fix prices, and that Columbia, Universal and United Artists, in requiring the maintenance of minimum prices in their licenses granted to these exhibitor-defendants, have participated in that system.

It is a reasonable inference from all the foregoing that the distributor-defendants have acquiesced in the establishment of a price-fixing system and have conspired with one another to maintain prices. Such a conspiracy is per se a violation of the Sherman Act. Ethyl Gasoline Corp. v. United States, 309 U. S. 436; United States v. Frankfort Distilleries, Inc., 324 U. S. 293; United States v. Masonite Corp., 316 U. S. 265.

Moreover, irrespective of the conspiracy among distributors to which we have referred, each distributor-defendant has illegally combined with its licensees, for in agreeing to maintain a stipulated minimum admission price, each exhibitor thereby consents to the minimum price level at which it will compete against other licensees of the same distributor whether they exhibit on the same run or not. The total effect is that through the separate contracts between the distributor and its licensees a price structure is erected which regulates the licensees' ability to compete against one another in admission prices. Each licensee knows from the general uniformity of admission price practices that other licensees having theatres suitable for exhibition of a distributor's picture in the particular competitive area will also be restricted as to maintenance of minimum prices, and this acquiescence of the exhibitors in the distributor's control of price competition renders the whole a conspiracy between each distributor and its licensees. An effective system of price control in which the distributor and its licensees knowingly take part by entering into price-restricting contracts is thereby created. That the combination is made up of a sum of separate licensing contracts, individually executed, does not affect its illegality, for tacit participation in a general scheme to control prices is as violative of the Sherman Act as an explicit agreement. Interstate Circuit v. United States, 306 U. S. 208; United States v. Masonite Corp., 316 U. S. 265; Goldman Theatres, Inc. v. Loew's Inc., 150 F. 2d 738 (C. C. A. 3).

This practice of stipulating minimum admission prices in the contracts of licenses is illegal in another respect. The differentials in price set by a distributor in licensing a particular picture in theatres exhibiting on different runs in the same competitive area are calculated to encourage as many patrons as possible to see the picture in the prior-run theatres where they will pay higher prices than in the subsequent runs. The reason for this is that if 10,000 people of a city's population are ultimately to see the picture—no matter on what run—the gross revenue to be realized from their patronage is increased relatively to the increase in numbers seeing it in the higher-priced prior-run theatres. In effect, the distributor, by the fixing of minimum prices, attempts to give the prior-run exhibitors as near a monopoly of the patronage as possible. This, we believe, to be in violation of § 2 of the Sherman Act, at least when the distributor's own theatres are not exhibiting its picture on a prior-run and it is to theatres other than its own that it attempts to give a monopoly.

It is argued that the practice of minimum admission price-fixing is permitted under the Copyright Act. But that act has never been held to sanction a conspiracy among licensors and licensees artificially to maintain prices. We do not question that the Copyright Act permits the owner of a copyrighted picture to exhibit it in its own theatres upon such terms as it sees fit, nor need we now decide whether a copyright owner may lawfully fix admission prices to be charged by a single independent exhibitor for the exhibition of its film, if other licensors and exhibitors are not in contemplation. Interstate Circuit v. United States, 306 U. S. 208; cf. United States v. General Electric Co., 272 U. S. 476. As other licensors and exhibitors are always in contemplation, so far as we can see, the question would appear academic.

This does not contravene the rule announced in United States v. General Electric Co., 272 U. S. 476, for there a license to only a single licensee—the Westinghouse Company—was involved, and, therefore, no conspiracy which sought to amplify the rights of the licensor under the Patent Act. The other question involved in that case was whether a patentee might lawfully require its bona fide agents to maintain minimum prices in selling the former's patented articles. The court held that it could. There is no claim here, however, that the exhibitors as licensees under the distributors' copyrights are agents in any sense, and we do not see that such a claim could be made. In any event, United States v. Masonite Corp., 316 U. S. 265, involved facts closely analogous to those here and affords ample basis for our decision.

Some argument has been made that the defendants' fixing of minimum admission prices is exempted from operation of the Sherman Act by the Miller-Tydings Amendment to that act, 50 Stat. 693 (1937), 15 U. S. C. A. § 1 (1940). The amendment pertains, however, only to "contracts or agreements prescribing minimum prices for the resale of a commodity", and the undisputed evidence is that the distributors merely grant licenses to the exhibitors for exhibition of their films and that title to none of their films at any time passes to the exhibitors. Furthermore, the distributor-defendants have engaged in a conspiracy, and the amendment explicitly states that despite its other provisions, contracts or agreements between "persons, firms, or corporations in competition with each other" to establish or maintain minimum prices remain illegal. United States v. Frankfort Distilleries, Inc., 324 U. S. 293; United States v. Bausch & Lomb Co., 321 U. S. 707; United States v. Univis Lens Co., 316 U. S. 241.

The foregoing holding that the defendants have all engaged in unlawful price-fixing does not prevent the distributors from continuing their present methods of determining film rentals; they may measure their compensation by stated sums, by a given percentage of a particular theatre's receipts, by a combination of these two, or by any other appropriate means. What is held to be violative of the Sherman Act is not the distributors' devices for measuring rentals, but their fixing of minimum admission prices which automatically regulates the ability of one licensee to compete against another for the patron's dollar and tends to increase such prices as well as profits from exhibition.

If the exhibitors are not restrained by the distributors in the right to fix their own prices, there will be an opportunity for the exhibitors, whether they be affiliates or independents, to compete with one another. This is because one exhibitor by lowering admission prices will be able to compete with other exhibitors in obtaining patrons for his theatre—a competition which may well benefit both exhibitors and the public paying the admission fees.

Clearance and Run

Among provisions common to the licensing contracts of all the distributor-defendants are those by which the licensor agrees not to exhibit or grant a license to exhibit a certain motion picture before a specified number of days after the last date of the exhibition therein licensed. This so-called period of "clearance" or "protection" is stated in the various licenses in differing ways: in terms of a given period between designated runs, as for example in the Chicago area, Plaintiff's Exh. 369, see Bigelow v. RKO Radio Pictures, Inc., 150 F. 2d 877 (C. C. A. 7), affirmed 326 U. S. (February 25, 1946), and as in Washington and New York, Plaintiff's Exhibits 244, 471; in terms of admission prices charged by competing theatres, as "20 days over 30¢ theatres, 28 days over 25¢ theatres," Plaintiff's Exhibits 57, 173, 178, 189; in terms of a given period of clearance over specifically named theatres, Plaintiff's Exhibits 94, 181, 242, 253, 259; in terms of so many days' clearance over specified areas or towns, Plaintiff's Exhibits 126, 175, 182, 182A, 183, 194, 244, 250, 255, 470, 476; in terms of clearances as fixed by other distributors, Plaintiff's Exhibits 188, 417; or in terms of combinations of these formulae.

It appears to be plaintiff's contention that clearance practices inherently operate to produce unreasonable restrictions of competition among theatres and are therefore per se violative of the Sherman Act. With this we do not agree, for it seems to us that a grant of clearance, when not accompanied by a fixing of minimum prices or not unduly extended as to area or duration, affords a fair protection to the interests of the licensee without unreasonably interfering with the interests of the public. At common law a vendor of income-producing property may validly covenant with his purchaser not to compete for a given time or within a given area so long as the restrictions are reasonably necessary to protect the value of the property purchased. Cincinnati, Portsmouth, Big Sandy and Pomeroy Packet Co. v. Bay, 200 U. S. 179; see Rogers v. Parry, 2 Cro. 326 (K. B. 1613); United States v. Addyston Pipe & Steel Co., 85 Fed. 271 (C. C. A. 6). It is true that licenses of property rather than sales are here concerned and that the distributors covenant not only not to exhibit the films themselves, but also not to license them to others. Nevertheless, we believe these are not differences which affect the applicability of the common-law rule to the present case, for licenses between one distributor and one exhibitor with reasonable clearance provisions do not, in our opinion, involve anything unlawful. Such provisions are no more than safeguards against concurrent or subsequent licenses in the same area until the exhibitor whose theatre is involved has had a chance to exhibit the pictures licensed without invasion by a subsequent exhibitor at a lower price. It seems nothing more than an adoption of the common law rule to restrict subsequent exhibitions for a reasonable time within a reasonable area. While clearance may indirectly affect admission prices, it does not fix them and is, we believe, a reasonable restraint permitted by the Sherman Act. Standard Oil Co. v. United States, 221 U. S. 1; United States v. American Tobacco Co., 221 U. S. 106; Westway Theatre, Inc. v. Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corp., 30 F. Supp. 830, affirmed on opinion below, 113 F. 2d 932 (C. C. A. 4); see United States v. Masonite Corp., 316 U. S. 265; Ethyl Gasoline Corp. v. United States, 309 U. S. 436.

The costs of each black and white print is from $150 to $300, and of a technicolor print is from $600 to $800. Many of the bookings are for less than the cost of the print so that exhibitions would be confined to the larger high-priced theatres unless a system of successive runs with a reasonable protection for the earlier runs is adopted in the way of clearance.

In Section VIII of the Consent Decree, moreover, there is the explicit statement to which all parties, including the plaintiff, consented.

> "It is recognized that clearance, reasonable as to time and area, is essential in the distribution and exhibition of motion pictures."

While, as previously stated, we do not deem ourselves bound by any provision of the consent decree, if we now find that it violates the Sherman Act, the forcefulness of the phrasing of this sentence indicates the proved utility of clearance practices in the movie industry and also their apparent necessity for a reasonable conduct of the business. Indeed, it is practically conceded that exhibitors would find extremely perilous the acceptance of licenses for the exhibition of films without assurance by the distributor that a nearby competitor would not be licensed to show the same film either at the same time or so soon thereafter that the exhibitor's expected income—perhaps on the basis of which he agreed to the specified rental—would be greatly diminished. Moreover, we understand the plaintiff to concede that the licensor may license its pictures for different successive dates. A reasonable clearance is in practical effect much the same. Either a license for successive dates, or one providing for clearance, permits the public to see the picture in a later-exhibiting theatre at lower than prior rates.

Several courts have previously considered the validity of clearances under the Sherman Act and have concluded that in the absence of an unconscionably long time or too extensive an area embraced by the clearance, or a conspiracy of distributors to fix clearances, there was nothing of itself illegal in their use. Westway Theatre, Inc. v. Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corp., 30 F. Supp. 830 (D. Md.), affirmed on opinion below, 113 F. 2d 932 (C. C. A. 4), and unreported cases therein cited; Gary Theatre Co. v. Columbia Pictures Corp., 120 F. 2d 891 (C. C. A. 7). We find the reasoning of these cases persuasive.

It is true that in some instances large theatre circuits by use of their great film-buying power have been able to negotiate successfully with the distributor-defendants for grants of unreasonable clearances or unjustified prior runs for their theatres. United States v. Crescent Amusement Co., 323 U. S. 173; Bigelow v. RKO Radio Pictures, Inc., 150 F. 2d 877 (C. C. A. 7), affirmed 326 U. S. — (February 25, 1946); Goldman v. Loew's, 150 F. 2d 738 (C. C. A. 3); United States v. Schine Chain Theatres, Inc., 63 F. Supp. 229 (W. D. N. Y.). While we cannot find sufficient evidence to support an inference that the major defendants here, though controlling some of the largest circuits of theatres in the country and thus possessing potential weapons of great strength, have either collectively or severally entered upon a general policy of discriminating against independents in their grants of clearances, yet they have acquiesced in and forwarded a uniform system of clearances and in numerous instances have maintained unreasonable clearances to the prejudice of independents and perhaps even of affiliates. The decision of such controversies as may arise over clearances should be left to local suits in the area concerned, or, even more appropriately, to litigation before an Arbitration Board composed of men versed in the complexities of this industry.

In determining the reasonableness of the specific clearances which may come before these tribunals, they should consider whether the clearance has been set so as to favor affiliates or control the admission prices of the theatres involved. A distributor will naturally tend to grant a subsequent run to and clearance over a theatre for which the owner of his own volition sets a low admission price; for the distributor will be inclined to seek out the higher priced theatres first where the revenue is likely to be greater and consequently in case of licenses on a percentage basis where a percentage share will be higher. This, however, would seem the inevitable result of the competition for the distributor's films from theatres which are the larger or better equipped, and for which higher admission prices may therefore be charged by their operators. Such competition the lower priced theatres must be prepared to meet, or else be content with subsequent runs and grants of clearance over them. The temptations to the distributor to use clearance grants to force a theatre to raise its prices and thus to qualify for prior runs having less clearance over it, and more clearance over competitors are nevertheless obvious and the courts or arbitration board should guard that this is not done. Clearance should be granted on the basis of theatre conditions which the exhibitor creates, not the distributor. The line to be drawn is indeed indistinct, but its existence is no less real.

In determining whether any clearance complained of is unreasonable, the following factors should be taken into consideration and accorded the importance and weight to which each is entitled, regardless of the order in which they are listed:

(1) The admission prices, as set by the exhibitors, of the theatres involved;

(2) The character and location of the theatres involved, including size, type of entertainment, appointments, transit facilities, etc.;

(3) The policy of operation of the theatres involved, such as the showing of double features, gift nights, giveaways, premiums, cut-rate tickets, lotteries, etc.;

(4) The rental terms and license fees paid by the theatres involved and the revenues derived by the distributor-defendant from such theatres;

(5) The extent to which the theatres involved compete with each other for patronage;

(6) The fact that a theatre involved is affiliated with a defendant-distributor or with an independent circuit of theatres should be disregarded; and

(7) There should be no clearance between theatres not in substantial competition.

The foregoing has been directed to the validity of clearance provisions resulting from separate negotiations between individual distributors and exhibitors in free and open competition with other distributors and exhibitors, and, as stated, we believe their reasonable use to be lawful. It is here claimed by plaintiff, however, that the distributor-defendants have acted in concert in the formation of a uniform system of clearances for the theatres to which they license their films and that the exhibitor-defendants have assisted in creating and have acquiesced in this system. This we find to be the case and hold to be in violation of the Sherman Act.

The following testimony warrants the inference that the defendants, as we found to be the case in the fixing of admission prices, have acted in concert in their grants of run and clearance. William F. Rodgers, general sales manager and vice-president of Loew's, testified that the field managers determine whether a theatre shall be licensed to exhibit on a first or on a subsequent run, that the clearance of a given theatre is more or less historical except for that of new theatres, and that there has been very little change in clearance over a period of years. Record pp. 542-3. Prior to 1943-44 Loew's license agreements provided that the clearance granted therein should apply to any theatre thereafter opened. Record p. 556.

Charles M. Reagan, vice-president of Paramount in charge of sales, stated that once clearance is agreed upon, it remains the same unless either exhibitor or distributor wants to change it. Record pp. 710-11. There is a difference between a distributor's and an exhibitor's interest in the period of clearance granted. The distributor wants to get the most possible in film rental from all the runs, the exhibitor to get as much clearance over a succeeding run as possible, because he has no interest in any succeeding run. The distributor, however, has a definite interest. Record p. 710. Clearances as granted apply to all pictures regardless of their quality. Record p. 715.

Martin J. Mullen, vice-president of M & P Theatres, a managing corporation which operates a group of New England theatres affiliated with Paramount, said that clearance is generally negotiated each time a license contract is made, but is actually carried along from year to year and generally understood when once established; that originally, before his time, clearance was established as a result of individual negotiations and followed along the same lines as they were with some changes. Record, p. 968. All defendants grant the same clearance to the same theatre. Record p. 977.

John J. Friedl, president and general manager of the Minnesota Amusement Company, a wholly-owned subsidiary of Paramount, said that he generally got from the various distributors the same clearance for the particular theatre for which he is negotiating; that while clearance is negotiated with each license, it generally remains the same, and the same clearance is granted by distributor-defendants and non-defendants alike, Record p. 1003; that clearance is pretty well established, and it is definitely followed in all cases. Record p. 1013.

Morton J. Thalheimer, an independent theatre exhibitor in Richmond, Virginia, called as a witness by Fox, testified that clearance was in effect in Richmond when he first went into business, and it seemed perfectly normal and natural that it should remain that way; that it protects his first-run against his own sub-runs and against his competitors' sub-runs. Record p. 1384. To his knowledge, the system of clearances had existed in Richmond for over nineteen years, during which time there had not been any change. Record p. 1401.

Harold J. Fitzgerald, president of Fox Wisconsin Theatres, Inc., operating sixty-six motion picture theatres in Wisconsin and Michigan, a wholly owned subsidiary of the defendant National Theatres Corporation, testified by affidavit that the situation with respect to the licensing of films, and the runs and clearances involved, were much the same in 1928 as they are today, Record p. 1973; that licensing arrangements were vital to distributor and exhibitor and that clearance obviously had a definite effect upon the capacity of his corporation to secure patronage at its top admission price. If Fox Wisconsin undertook to pay a distributor the film rental based upon a high percentage of gross, it would be interested in clearance over any neighborhood theatre which the distributor might license on a competing subsequent run. Generally negotiations as to clearance do not take place with respect to each block of pictures licensed because once a fair and reasonable clearance has been determined by the distributor and exhibitor it tends to become fixed, and ordinarily will be the same in a series of contracts in the absence of any unchanged circumstances and conditions. Record p. 1983.

Benjamin Kalmenson, sales manager of Warner Bros. Distributors Corporation, testified that clearances have been pretty well set through the country for a great many years, and are "acquiesced in by exhibitors, producers, independents, affiliates and everybody, until there has grown up a kind of system of clearance." Record p. 1506.

Robert Mochrie, general sales manager of RKO Radio Pictures, Inc., stated upon his examination that RKO in determining the length of clearance between theatres, takes into consideration the amount of clearance which in its opinion will yield it the largest revenue, taking all theatres into account as a whole and subject to a clearance condition that has built itself up in the city over a period of time. In negotiating licenses, there is frequent occasion to give consideration to the existing clearance between theatres, but they do not consider it anew each time because the factors which determined it originally at some past time remain stable from year to year. He said there are no general or frequent instances in his practice of clearances different in some particular city from those granted by a co-defendant. He usually knows what clearances other distributors are granting. His customer usually tells him what clearance he wants, which is what he is getting from other distributors. He has no agreements with other distributors that he will adopt the same clearance, and his explanation as to why in some instances the clearances granted by RKO to a prior run theatre is the same as a clearance granted by one or more other distributors serving the same theatre is that clearance has been the outgrowth in time between those two theatres, and the exhibitor buys such products on such a clearance basis and offers the witness the same. Record pp. 1714-5.

Abraham Montague, general sales manager of Columbia, testified that in negotiating deals, the "clearance is something we usually find when we arrive there, and we usually negotiate our deal within the clearance we find"; that it would be impracticable and impossible to set up new clearance. Record p. 1268. His company keeps a record of clearances in the community. Record p. 1347. Where his company grants clearance to one theatre over another, it usually follows the pattern set by clearance that is given by other major distributors as well as those which are not majors. He usually does not make any independent determination of whether the clearance is reasonable or unreasonable. He takes it as he find it, and finding it in most cases standardized, his company does not feel that it is strong enough to change it. Record pp. 1376-7.

Paul N. Lazarus, manager of the contract department of United Artists testified that clearances are "generally understood, and they follow along their established custom." Record p. 1440. For testimony of other witnesses to the same effect as the foregoing, see Record pp. 2012, 2043, 2049, 2086, 2110-11.

The fixed character of clearances and the uniformity of the distributor-defendants' practice with reference thereto are shown by the exhibits, as well as the testimony. Many of the franchises, master agreements, and so-called "formula deals" which are in evidence provide that clearances shall be the same as those in effect on the date of the agreement. See Paintiff's Exhibits 419A (RKO and independent); 419B (RKO and Paramount); 241 (Paramount and Fox); 172 (Paramount and Loew's); 473 (RKO and Universal); 245 (Warner and Fox); 251 (Fox and Paramount); 254 (Fox and RKO). Some of the agreements establish clearances for more than a season. See Plaintiff's Exhibits 181 (3 years, Loew's and Warner); 187 (3 years, Loew's and Fox); 249 (9 years, Loew's and Fox); 259 (3 years, Warner and Universal). Others provide that the clearance is to be no less favorable to the exhibitor than that which had been granted by the distributor for the previous season or in the preceding agreement. See Plaintiff's Exhibits 265, 472, (Columbia and Fox); 190 (RKO and Fox); 199, 272A, 383, (United Artists and Fox).

In some of the agreements, the clearance therein stated was also to be granted to all theatres which the exhibitor-party to the contract might thereafter own, lease, control, manage, or operate. See Plaintiff's Exhibits 172 (Paramount and Loew's); 266, 266A (Columbia and Warner); 471 (Columbia and Loew's); 192 (Fox and Warner). Moreover, the license forms for 1936-7 of Paramount, Fox, Loew's, Warner, RKO, Columbia and Universal, and for 1943-44 of Paramount, Warner, Columbia and Universal, each contain a provision identical or similar to the following:

> "If clearance is granted against a named theatre or theatres indicating that it is the intention of the Distributor to grant such clearance against all theatres in the immediate vicinity of the Exhibitor's theatre, then, unless otherwise provided in the schedule, such clearance shall include any theatre in such vicinity thereafter erected or opened." See Plaintiff's Exhibits 275, 277, 279-81, 283-6, 289-90.

It is clear that the purpose of these two types of clearance agreements was to fix the run and clearance status of any theatre thereafter opened; not on the basis of its appointments, size, location, and other competitive factors normally entering into such a determination, but rather upon the sole basis of whether it were operated by the exhibitor-party to the agreement

Much that has been said about clearances is applicable also to runs; the two are practically alike. Clearances are given to protect a particular run against a subsequent run, and the practice of clearance is so closely allied with that of run as to make comment on the one applicable to the other.

Rodgers, of Loew's, testified that a run usually remains static for a given theatre, Record p. 421, and he determines what runs shall be "offered" to an exhibitor. Record p. 418. The size of the theatre does not necessarily determine whether it is satisfactory for operation on a first run. Record p. 566.

Reagan, of Paramount, said that negotiations with an exhibitor are "usually conducted on the basis of a particular run." In the case of a new theatre, the distributor usually considers whether it wants to do business on the run the theatre would like.[7] In the New York area, second runs are sold by him only to Loew's and RKO.. Record pp. 815-16.

The evidence we have referred to shows that both independent distributors and exhibitors when attempting to bargain with the defendants have been met by a fixed scale of clearances, runs, and admission prices to which they have been obliged to conform if they wished to get their pictures shown upon satisfactory runs or were to compete in exhibition either with the defendants' theatres or with theatres to which the latter have licensed their pictures. Under the circumstances disclosed in the record there has been no fair chance for either the present or any future licensees to change a situation sanctioned by such effective control and general acquiescence as have obtained. See Bigelow v. RKO Radio Pictures, Inc., 150 F. 2d 877 (C.C.A. 7), affirmed 326 U. S. (February 25, 1946); Goldman v. Loew's, Inc., 150 F. 2d 738 (C.C.A. 3); Youngclaus v. Omaha Film Board of Trade, 60 F. 2d 538 (D.C. Neb.). The only way competition may be introduced into the present system of fixed prices, clearances, and runs is to require a defendant when

[7] "Q. And some negotiations are conducted on the basis of a first-run of a product, some second, some subsequent? A. Yes, sir.

Judge Bright: You mean the particular run is established before the negotiation with the exhibitor?

The Witness: Sometimes it generally is established, although that has been the result of years of experience that we have had in negotiating with our customers.

Judge Bright: How about a new theatre or new exhibitor?

The Witness: There is nothing established there, and we consider all the factors there and make a decision on whether we want to do business with him on the run that we would like to have.

Q. Now, how is the matter of terms upon which Paramount films will be licensed, determined? A. Determined by negotiations based upon experience we have had with the particular theatre with whom we are negotiating." Record, p. 693.

Q. You do not mean that each time there is a negotiation the whole question of run is opened up again? A. No, it is not.

Q. The policy on which the theatre is operated has usually been established over a long period of time? A. Yes.

licensing its pictures to other exhibitors to make each picture available at a minimum fixed or percentage rental and (if clearance is desired) to grant a reasonable clearance and run. When so offered, the licensor shall grant the license for the desired run to the highest bidder if such bidder is responsible and has a theatre of a size, location, and equipment to present the picture to advantage. In other words, if two theatres are bidding and are fairly comparable the one offering the best terms shall receive the license. Thus price fixing among the licensors or between a licensor and its licensees as well as the non-competitive clearance system may be terminated, and the requirements of the Sherman Act, which the present system violates, will be adequately met. The administrative details involved in such changes will require further consideration. We are satisfied that existing arrangements are in derogation of the rights of independent distributors, exhibitors, and the public, and that the proposed changes will tend to benefit them all.

Formula Deals, Master Agreements, and Franchises

Formula deals, certain master agreements, and franchises have tended to restrain trade in the distribution and exhibition of motion picture features and in view of the history and relation to the moving picture business of the various parties to this action have exercised unreasonable restraints. In our opinion these restraints will be obviated or at least sufficiently mitigated by requiring a distributor wishing its pictures to be shown outside of its own theatres to offer to license each picture to all theatres desiring to show it on a particular run and, if the theatres are responsibly owned and otherwise adequate, to grant the desired run to the highest bidder.

Formula deals have been entered into by Paramount and by RKO with independent and affiliated circuits. By such agreements a particular circuit has been licensed to exhibit a certain feature in all its theatres at a specified percentage of the national gross receipts realized from that feature by all theatres in the United States. The circuit may allocate playing time and film rentals among the various theatres as it sees fit. See Plaintiff's Exhibits 241, 419A, 419B. Arrangements whereby all the theatres of a circuit are included in a single agreement, and no opportunity is afforded for other theatre owners to bid for the picture in their several areas, seriously and as we hold unreasonably restrain competition. These formula deals have been negotiated without, so far as we are informed, any competition on the part of independent theatre owners who would labor under a great disadvantage in attempting severally to match or outbid the offers of a circuit that was making offers for all of its theatres.

Certain master agreements are open to the same objection as formula deals, for they cover exhibition in two or more theatres in a particular circuit and allow the exhibitor to allocate the film rental paid among the theatres as it sees fit and also to exhibit the features upon such playing time as it deems best, and leaves other terms to the circuit's discretion. See, e.g., Plaintiff's Exhibits 196, 251, 267, 270, 270A, 273, 476. These are different from some other master agreements in which there are separate provisions covering the licensing of the picture for each particular theatre. See, e.g., Plaintiff's Exhibits 182, 182A, 189, 190, 191, 248. These later agreements in effect only combine in one document a number of theatres with proper licenses for each. This may be done if there is an opportunity for exhibitors to bid for the same runs at an offered price.

Franchises which so far as the five major defendants are concerned were forbidden by the consent decree are also objectionable because they cover too long periods (more than one season) and also because they embrace all the pictures released by a given distributor. They necessarily contravene the plan of licensing each picture, theatre by theatre, to the highest bidder.

It is true that a prohibition of formula deals, master agreements and franchises will interfere with certain contracts which have been made in the past but their formation was a restraint upon trade which was unlawful at the time they were made, and therefore should not be continued. We see no reason to hold that the failure to bring in to this suit one of the contracting parties prevents the issue of an injunction forbidding one who is a party to the suit from continuing to carry out an arrangement which causes unlawful restraints. While our decision will not be res judicata as to those not parties to the litigation, the parties are necessarily and properly bound, and indeed the decision is a judicial precedent against the others on the questions of law involved in those situations we have referred to where they have unreasonably restrained trade and commerce.

In our opinion it follows from the foregoing that provisions in license agreements known as moveovers which give to a licensee the privilege of exhibiting a given picture in a second theatre as a continuation of a run in a first theatre are incompatible with the system we have prescribed of bidding for pictures and runs theatre by theatre. The same would seem to be true of so-called overage-and-underage provisions which are often inserted in licenses to permit an exhibitor owning a number of theatres to apply a deficit in the playing time in one or more others. Under such provisions it is not possible to determine the amount payable for the account of one theatre until the performances in the others have been completed, or practically to apply the bidding system we are establishing. But provisions in licenses for "extended" or "repeat" runs in the same theatre, though apparently criticized by the government, would not seem to be objectionable if reasonably limited in time when other exhibitors are given the opportunity to bid for similar licenses. Likewise, any other license provisions which may be called to our attention that would substantially interfere with the effectiveness of the bidding system would have to be revised and perhaps may have to be specially dealt with in the decree to follow this opinion.

Block-booking and Blind-selling.

For many years the distributor-defendants licensed their films in "blocks," or indivisible groups, before they had been actually produced. In such cases the only knowledge prospective exhibitors had of the films which they had contracted for was from a description of each picture by title, plot and players. In many cases licenses for all the films had to be accepted in order to obtain any, though sometimes the exhibitor was given a right of subsequent cancellation for a certain number of pictures. Because of complaints of block-booking and blind-selling based upon the supposed unfairness of contracts which often included pictures—the inferior quality of which could not be known—Sections III and IV of the consent decree required the five consenting distributors to trade-show their films before offering them for license and limited the number which might be included in any contract to five. More than one block of five however could be licensed where the contents of any had been trade-shown. While this restriction in the consent decree has now ceased by time limitation, the consenting distributors have continued to observe the restriction. The non-assenting distributors have retained up to the present time their previous methods of licensing in blocks, but have allowed their customers considerable freedom to cancel the license as to a percentage of the pictures contracted for.

The plaintiff argues that the Sherman Act forbids block-booking in toto. This is said to be because it is illegal to condition the licensing of one film upon the acceptance of another, and it therefore can make no difference whether the group of films involved in a license be two or forty. In our opinion this contention is sound, and any form of block-booking is illegal by which an exhibitor, in order to obtain a license for one or more films, must accept a license for one or more other films.

A patentee who has granted a license in consideration that the patented invention shall be used by the licensee only with unpatented material furnished by the licensor may not restrain as a contributory infringer one who sells to the licensee like materials for like use. Mercoid Corp. v. Mid-Continent Investment Co., 320 U. S. 661; Mercoid Corp. v. Minneapolis-Honeywell Regulator Co., 320 U. S. 680; Morton Salt Co. v. G. S. Suppiger, 314 U. S. 488, 491; Motion Picture Patents Co. v. Universal Film Mfg. Co., 243 U. S. 502; Carbice Corp. v. American Patents Corp., 283 U. S. 27; Leitch Mfg. Co. v. Barber Co., 302 U. S. 458. Moreover, as was said in Mercoid Corp. v. Mid-Continent Co., 320 U. S. 661, 670, a decree for an injunction against a contributory infringer would sanction both "a misuse of the patent privilege and a violation of the anti-trust laws." The same rule would appear to apply to copyrights and prevent a suit for contributory infringement by a copyright owner who had licensed the printing of his book, only in connection with paper supplied by him, against a third party supplying paper to the licensee in violation of the agreement. See Interstate Circuit Inc. v. United States, 306 U. S. 208; United States v. Crescent Amusement Co., 323 U. S. 173; Straus v. Am. Publisher's Ass'n, 231 U. S. 222.

It is true that a copyrighted motion picture when united with another copyrighted picture by block-booking is not tied to an uncopyrighted article. Nevertheless the objections to conditioning the licensing of one picture upon the licensing of another are the same, for the result is to give the copyright owner not only the reward which is his due from the licensing of a single copyrighted film, but to extend his monopoly by requiring his licensee to accept one or more other films and to pay royalties therefor as an additional consideration. We cannot see that this differs in principle from requiring the licensee to purchase uncopyrighted articles in connection with the license of a copyright. In either case the copyright owner is obtaining something which the decisions have forbidden as beyond the grant of his limited monopoly. Justice Holmes in his dissenting opinion in Motion Picture Patents Co. v. Universal Film Mfg. Co., 243 U. S. 502, 519, argued persuasively that the right of the owner of a patent to keep his device out of use included the right to condition its use. Such a doctrine would contravene the rule we are laying down, but his views were rejected by the majority of the Supreme Court in that decision, as well as in Straus v. Victor Talking Machine Co., 243 U. S. 490, and have proved to be contrary to a long line of subsequent decisions of that court—indeed to have been supplanted by the general trend of authority ever since the days of Henry v. Dick, 224 U. S. 1.

It may be argued that the common law gives a right to condition the licensing of one film upon the acceptance of another—that it is as though the owner of ordinary chattels refused to sell a lot to A unless the latter would purchase in a larger quantity than he desired. The question whether such a contract involving patents or copyrights was good at common law was apparently left open in Motion Picture Patents Co. v. Universal Film Mfg. Co., 243 U. S. 503, and Keeler v. Standard Folding Bed Co., 157 U. S. 659, and in Federal Trade Commission v. Paramount Famous-Lasky Corp., 57 F. 2d 152, the Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit sustained contracts of block-booking.

Block-booking, when the license of any film is conditioned upon taking of other films, is a system which prevents competitors from bidding for single pictures on their individual merits and adds to the monopoly of a single copyrighted picture that of another copyrighted picture which must be taken and exhibited in order to secure the first. It differs from such a sale of chattels as we have mentioned because it extends a monopoly which the owner of the chattels is not assumed to have. We are not inclined to follow Federal Trade Commission v. Paramount Famous-Lasky Corp., 57 F. 2d 152 (C.C.A. 2), for the reason we have given and particularly because of recent decisions of the Supreme Court. As Stone, C. J., said in Ethyl Gasoline Corp. v. United States, 309 U. S. 436, 459,—when dealing with the use of one patent to exploit another:

> "• • • It [Ethyl Gasoline Corporation] has chosen to exploit its patents by manufacturing the fluid covered by them and by selling that fluid to refiners for use in the manufacture of motor fuel. Such benefits as result from control over the marketing of the treated fuel by the jobbers accrue primarily to the refiners and indirectly to appellant, only in the enjoyment of its monopoly of the fluid secured under another patent. The licensing conditions are thus not used as a means of stimulating the commercial development and financial returns of the patented invention which is licensed, but for the commercial development of the business of the refiners and the exploitation of a second patent monopoly not embraced in the first. The patent monopoly of one invention may no more be enlarged for the exploitation of a monopoly of another, see Standard Sanitary Mfg. Co. v. United States, supra, than for the exploitation of an unpatented article, United Shoe Machinery Co v. United States, supra; Carbice Corporation v. American Patents Corp., supra; Leitch-Manufacturing Co. v. Barber Co., supra; American Lecithin Co. v. Warfield Co., 105 F. 2d 207, or for the exploitation or promotion of a business not embraced within the patent. Interstate Circuit v. United States, supra, 228-230."

See also United States v. Crescent Amusement Co., 323 U. S. 173; Hartford-Empire Co. v. United States, 323 U. S. 386, 415, 452-3; Mercoid Corp. v. Mid-Continent Investment Co., 320 U. S. 661, 670; Mercoid Corp. v. Minneapolis Honeywell Regulator Co., 320 U. S. 680, 684; United States v. Masonite Corp., 316 U. S. 265, 277-8; Interstate Circuit, Inc. v. United States, 306 U. S. 208, 227-230; Stokes & Smith Co. v. Transparent-Wrap Machine Corp., decided by Second Circuit Court of Appeals May 1, 1946.

We, however declare illegal only that aspect of block-booking which makes the licensing of one copyright conditional upon an agreement to accept a license of one or more other copyrights. A distributor may license to an exhibitor at one time as many films as the latter wishes to receive, but the distributor may not constitute groups of pictures which it refuses to license separately. The distributor may of course not license his pictures at all, but if he does license them, he must do so severally and, in accordance with the bidding procedure previously indicated, must license them to the exhibitor or exhibitors who are qualified and offer the best terms for the various runs.

Blind-selling does not appear to be as inherently restrictive of competition as block-booking, although it is capable of some abuse. By this practise a distributor could promise a picture of good quality or of a certain type which when produced might prove to be of poor quality or of another type—a competing distributor meanwhile being unable to market its product and in the end losing its outlets for future pictures. The evidence indicates that trade-shows, which are designed to prevent such blind-selling, are poorly attended by exhibitors. Record pp. 1178-9. Accordingly, exhibitors who chose to obtain their films for exhibition in quantities, need to be protected against burdensome agreements by being given an option to reject a certain percentage of their blind-licensed pictures within a reasonable time after they shall have become available for inspection. Such right of rejection has been incorporated in numerous licenses given by the defendants and should be afforded whenever licenses of unproduced films and films not trade-shown are secured by an exhibitor who has made the best competitive bid for them.

The only group licensing we are prepared to sanction is licensing by which the group is not offered on condition that the licensee shall take all the pictures included in it, or none, but in which the pictures are separately priced, and each picture is to be sold to the highest duly qualified bidder. As we have already indicated in discussing formula deals, master agreements, and franchises, the offering of pictures should be theatre by theatre, and if more than one picture is included in a license agreement, it will be only because of business convenience and to the extent that each picture so included has received the best bid.

"Pooling" Agreements

It is claimed by plaintiff that the theatre-owning defendants have combined with each other and with independent theatre-owners by "pooling" their theatres through operating agreements, leases, joint stock ownership of theatre-operating corporations, or through joint ownership of theatres in fee. We are asked to determine the validity of these various means of joining interests.

By far the most numerous type of agreement in evidence is that by which given theatres of two or more exhibitors, normally in competition with each other, are operated as a unit or most of their business policies collectively determined by a joint committee, or by one of the exhibitors, and by which profits of the "pooled" theatres are divided among the owners according to pre-agreed percentages. See, e. g., Plaintiff's Exhibits 9, 100, 200, 206, 213, 218, 220-1, 223, 226, 226A, 232. Some of the agreements provide that the parties thereto may not acquire other theatres in the competitive vicinity without first offering them for inclusion in the "pool." See, e. g., Plaintiff's Exhibits 201, 205-6, 219.

These operating agreements we hold to be in clear conflict with the Sherman Act, for through them a defendant-exhibitor reduces to a minimum opposition between its own and other theatres in the "pool." Cooperation, rather than competition, characterizes their operation, and in view of the exhibitor-defendants' financial strength, control of first-class film distribution, ownership of concentrated numbers of first-run theatres, and especially their combination to reduce competition in exhibition through systems of price-fixing and clearances, such restraints as these agreements impose upon free commerce in motion pictures are far less than reasonable. The result is to eliminate competition pro tanto both in exhibition and in distribution of films which would flow almost automatically to the theatres in the earnings of which they have a joint interest.

Other forms of operating agreements are between major defendants and independent exhibitors rather than between major defendants, see, e. g., Plaintiffs' Exhibits 97, 118, 208, 238-9, 358, but we are not of the opinion that this renders them legal. The effect is to ally two or more theatres of different ownership into a coalition for the nullification of competition between them and for their more effective competition against theatres not members of the "pool." Even if the parties to such combinations were not major film producers and distributors, but were all wholly independent exhibitors, such agreements might often be regarded as beyond the reasonable limits of restraint allowance under the Sherman Act. This result is certain when some of the parties are of major statute in the movie industry and have in other ways imposed unlawful restraints upon it, as we have found to be the case upon the record before us.

In certain other cases the operating agreements are accomplished by leases of theatres, the rentals being determined by a stipulated percentage of profits earned by the "pooled" theatres, see, e. g., Plaintiff's Exhibits 9, 106, 118, 204. This appears to be but another means of carrying out the illegal objection discussed above. While a theatre-owner may of course remove itself from the business of operating theatres by leasing them to anyone it deems fit upon a fixed rental basis, so long as a monopoly in exhibition is not thereby achieved by the lessee, any arrangement whereby one of the exhibitor-defendants in this case allies its theatres with those of a competing exhibitor, independent or affiliated, and yet itself remains in the trade of exhibiting motion pictures by retaining an interest in the profits earned by the allied theatres, is unlawful under the anti-trust acts.

Many theatres, or the corporations owning them, are held jointly by one or more of the exhibitor-defendants, in some cases in conjunction with independents. See, e. g., Plaintiff's Exhibits 8, 9, 46, 48, 62, 164, 355, 387; RKO's Exhibit 11. As these joint interests enable the major defendants to operate theatres collectively, rather than competitively, we find them illegal for the reasons above stated. Appropriate steps should be taken so that no exhibitor-defendant will own theatres (whether represented by fee, beneficial, or stock interests) jointly with other exhibitor-defendants, regardless of the size of the interests involved. Appropriate steps should also be taken so that no exhibitor-defendant or defendants will jointly own a theatre or stock interest therein with any independent exhibitor, except when a defendant or an independent owns an interest of five per cent or less, which we deem de minimis and only to be treated as an inconsequential investment in exhibition. See infra p. 71. This result may be reached in situations like Florida, Texas, Minnesota and Michigan by a sale, purchase, or exchange of interests in jointly-owned theatres so long as the transaction sought to be achieved will not result in an unreasonable restraint of competition in exhibition within the particular competitive area. To this end the court will control the manner in which rearrangements of these joint interests are effected.

It seems impracticable to do more than lay down general rules as to the foregoing situations. If further details are required to cover specific provisions of the various pooling agreements, they should be set forth in the decree to be hereafter entered.

It should be added that in our opinion there can be no objection to operating, booking, or film buying through agents, provided the agent is not also acting in respect to theatres owned by other exhibitors, independent or affiliated, and provided that in case the agent is buying films for its principal he does this through the bidding system, theatre by theatre.

Discrimination Among Licensees

The amended and supplemental complaint alleges that in licensing films each of the distributor-defendants has discriminated against small independent exhibitors and in favor of the large affiliated and unaffiliated circuits. Of the various contract provisions by which such discriminations are said to have been accomplished, plaintiff sets forth the following in its brief: suspending the terms of a given contract, if a circuit theatre remains closed for more than eight weeks, and reinstating it without liability upon re-opening, Plaintiff's Exhibits 188, 265-6, 383-4, 472-3; allowing large privileges in the selection and elimination of films, Plaintiff's Exhibits 172, 177, 192, 263-6, 383-4, 472; allowing deductions in film rentals if double bills are played, Plaintiff's Exhibits 183-4, 190, 199, 242, 245, 247, 258-9, 262, 264-6, 271-2a, 274, 382-3, 473; granting moveovers and extended runs, Plaintiff's Exhibits 182-2a, 199, 260, 262, 265, 267, 274, 383-4, 474, 476; granting road-show privileges, Plaintiff's Exhibits 187-8, 199, 232, 265-6, 383-4, 472; allowing overage and underage, Plaintiff's Exhibits 190-1, 194, 259, 265-6, 383; granting unlimited playing time, Plaintiff's Exhibits 241, 267, 269, 471; excluding foreign pictures and those of independent procers, Plaintiff's Exhibits 173-4, 181, 190-1, 194, 199, 262, 265-6, 272a, 383-4, 395, 470-2; granting rights to question the classification of features for rental purposes, Plaintiff's Exhibits 187, 232, 259, 265, 472-3; and especially, discriminating in film rentals, clearances, and minimum admission prices, see Plaintiff's Brief pp. 56-70, 75-85.

These provisions are found most frequently in franchises and master agreements, which are made with the larger circuits of affiliated and unaffiliated theatres. Record pp. 1432-3; Columbia's Exhibit 9a; Universal's Exhibit 2; Plaintiff's Exhibits 195, 198, 259, 261, 265-6a, 384, 396, 470-3. Small independents are usually licensed, however, upon the standard forms of contract, which do not include them. Record pp. 1432-3; Plaintiff's Exhibits 275-90. The competitive advantages of these provisions are so great that their inclusion in contracts with the larger circuits constitutes an unreasonable discrimination against small competitors in violation of the anti-trust laws. It seems unnecessary to decide whether the record before us justifies a reasonable inference that the distributor-defendants have conspired among themselves to discriminate among their licensees, for each discriminating contract constitutes a conspiracy between the licensee and licensor. Interstate Circuit Inc. v. United States, 306 U. S. 208; United States v. Crescent Amusement Co., 323 U. S. 173.

The defendants argue that these privileges granted to the circuits flow from their negotiations with the individual theatre-owners rather than from a standard policy of discrimination deliberately pursued by them. This is perhaps true, but the result is the same whether the bargaining power of the large exhibitors forces upon the distributors a discriminatory policy, or whether the latter voluntarily carry such a policy into effect. Acquiescence is an unreasonable restraint, as well as the creation of such a restraint, violates the Sherman Act. Under the bidding system we are requiring such discriminations would appear impossible. Those provisions which are not compatible with the operation of this system, or which are inherently unreasonable, such as a provisions for clearance between theatres where there is no substantial competition, will no longer be includible in licenses, as mentioned elsewhere, but otherwise the bidders will compete for licensing contracts on a parity, in that the same offer will be made to all prospective exhibitors in a comumnity.

The foregoing is not to be construed, however, as indicating that the distributor-defendants have discriminated among their licensees with respect to film rentals, clearances, or minimum admission prices. They have perhaps done so, but we are without sufficient knowledge of the many factors entering into the determination of these provisions such as the character of specific communities, the nature of the different theatre appointments, of the patrons, operating policies, locations, and responsibility of operators. In the absence of such facts, we are unable to infer that the distributor-defendants have violated the Sherman Act in this particular regard, but any discriminations in the other ways noted above in favor of affiliated licensee or licensees connected with independent circuits as against individual independents must be enjoined, and we believe will not exist in future licenses under the bidding sytem for which we are providing.

Divestiture of Theatres

We cannot accede to the prayer of the plaintiff that the major defendants should be divested of their theatres in order that no distributor of motion pictures shall be an exhibitor. Undoubtedly such a step while not ipso facto preventing price-fixing agreements or unreasonable clearance would terminate the government's most urgent objection to the present methods of conducting the motion picture business, but it would also withdraw the defendant-distributors from competition in the exhibition field and at the same time would create a new set of theatre owners which would be quite unlikely for some years to give the public as good service as the exhibitors they would have supplanted in view of the latter's demonstrated experience and skill in operating what must be regarded as in general the largest and best equipped theatres. We think that the opportunity of independents to compete under the bidding system for pictures and runs renders such a harsh remedy as complete divestiture unnecessary, at least until the efficiency of that system have been tried and found wanting.

In the year 1945 there were about 18,076 motion picture theatres in the United States of which the five major defendants had interests in 3,137 or 17.35 per cent. Of the latter, Paramount or its subsidiaries owned independently of the other defendants 1935—a little less than half, or about 7.72 per cent; Warner 501, or about 2.77 per cent; Loew's 135, or about .74 per cent; Fox 636, or about 3.52 per cent, and RKO 109, or about .60 per cent. There were 361 theatres or about 2.00 per cent, in which two or more of these defendants had joint interests, whether held directly or indirectly through stock ownership in the same corporation or through a lease or operating agreement. This tabulation excludes theatres connected with one or more of the defendants through film-buying or management contracts or through corporations in which a defendant owns an indirect minority stock interest. It includes all theatres in which each defendant otherwise owns a direct or indirect interest of any amount. See Loew's Exhibit 2; RKO's Exhibit 11; Plaintiff's Exhibits 8, 9, 12-3, 47-8, 64, 87-8, 97, 100, 118-20, 156-64, 360.

It would seem unlikely that theatre owners having aggregate interests of little more than one-sixth of all the theatres in the United States are exercising such a monopoly of the motion picture business that they should be subjected to the drastic remedy of complete divestiture in order to effect a proper degree of free competition. It is only in certain localities, and not in general, that an ownership even of first-run theatres approximating monopoly exists. Under the proposed system, the only theatres the competition of which in exhibition even Paramount—the largest owner—would in anywise control are the 7.72 per cent which it now owns. Each of the other four major defendants would control a far smaller percentage of the theatres. Even in places like Philadelphia and Cincinnati, where Warner and RKO have owned all the first-run theatres, their theatre interest cannot properly be aggregated to establish a conspiracy in restraining exhibition, for in such localities there would seem to be nothing to prevent other persons from building theatres of a similar type if the market for the distribution of films should be opened to the highest bidder and the builder of a new theatre could compete with the other theatre owners in obtaining pictures for exhibition in the theatre he had built. The only pictures that the present sole exhibitors in such localities could control would be their own, which they can always exhibit freely in their own theatres.

In about 60 per cent of the 92 cities having populations of over 100,000 on which the government mainly relies to prove its case, there are independent first-run theatres in competition with those of the major defendants except so far as it may be restricted by the trade practices we have criticized.[8] In about 91 per cent of these cities there is competition in first runs between independents and some of the major defendants or among the major defendants themselves, except so far as it may be restricted by the above trade practices.[9] If the bidding system we propose to set up, minimum admission prices in licenses eliminated, and the other restrictive agreements which we have discussed terminated, it is our opinion that adequate competition would exist. Indeed in all of the 92 cities, even where there is no present competition in first runs there is always competition in some run.

Moreover, there is no substantial proof that any of the corporate defendants was organized or has been maintained for the purpose of achieving a national monopoly, as was the case in Standard Oil Co. v. United States, 221 U. S. 1; United States v. American Tobacco Co., 221 U. S. 106, and United States v. Aluminum Co. of America, 148 F. 2d 416 (C.C.A. 2). The five major defendants cannot be treated collectively so as to establish claims of general monopolization in exhibition. They can only be restrained from the unlawful practices in fixing minimum prices, obtaining unreasonable clearances, block-booking, and other things we have criticized.

If in certain localities there is ownership by a single defendant of all the first-run theatres, there is no sufficient proof that it has been for the purpose of creating a monopoly and has not rather arisen from the inertness of competitors, their lack of financial ability to build theatres comparable to those of the defendants, or from the preference of the public for the best equipped houses and not

[8] According to Loew's Exhibit 13 and RKO's Exhibit 11, there are independent first-run theatres in all but the following 38 cities: Albany, Bridgeport, Charlotte, Chattanooga, Cincinnati, Cleveland, Columbus, Dallas, Dayton, Des Moines, Elizabeth, Erie, Flint, Fort Worth, Grand Rapids, Houston, Jersey City, Kansas City, Mo., Knoxville, Lowell, Memphis, Milwaukee, Minneapolis, Newark, New Haven, Norfolk, Omaha, Paterson, Peoria, Rochester, San Antonio, Scranton, South Bend, Syracuse, Toledo, Wichita, Worcester, Yonkers.

[9] Upon the termination of "pooling" agreements a major defendant may control all of the first-run theatres in only the following 8 cities: Charlotte, Chattanooga, Cincinnati, Erie, Knoxville, Peoria, South Bend, Wichita. Loew's Exhibit 13; RKO's Exhibit 11.

from "inherent vice" on the part of these defendants. Each defendant had a right to build and to own theatres and to exhibit pictures in them, and it takes greater proof than that each of them possessed great financial strength, many theatres, and exhibited the greater number of first-runs to deprive it of the ordinary rights of ownership. Outside the limits of the trade practices and agreements which we have found to violate the anti-trust laws and which will under the final decree be abolished, there is general competition among all the defendants as well as between them and independent distributors for the exhibition of their various pictures. Record p. 1062.

As was said by the expediting court in United States v. The Pullman Company, 64 F. Supp. 108, 112, (E. D. Pa., 1945):

> "If there is only one store in a town at which every one trades, that fact does not itself constitute a monopoly in the legal sense. It is only when the merchant maintains his position by devices which compel everyone to trade with him exclusively that the situation becomes legally objectionable."

In the case at bar, as we have reiterated, many of the objections are to the trade practices we have alluded to, and not to the ownership of theatres either by the major defendants or by their wholly-owned subsidiaries. If those theatres were all owned by entirely independent corporations the distributing-producing defendants, if not in competition in the distribution of their films, would control competition in the exhibition business by in the aggregate controlling the distribution of most of the best pictures in the United States and imposing restrictions upon their use. The root of the difficulties we have discovered lies not in the ownership of many or most of the best theatres by the producer-distributors, but in price-fixing, non-competitive granting of runs and clearances, unreasonable clearances, formula deals, master agreements, franchises, block-booking, pooling agreements and certain discriminations among licensees between defendants and independents. These practices, if employed in the future, in favor of powerful independents would effect all of the undesirable results that have existed when the five major defendants and their subsidiaries have owned or controlled numerous theatres in which the defendants' pictures have been exhibited. That such would be the case seems amply demonstrated by the decisions where powerful independent circuits were involved. United States v. Crescent Amusement Co., 323 U. S. 173; Interstate Circuit, Inc., v. United States, 306 U. S. 208. If the objectionable trade practices were eliminated, the only difference between such an assumed situation in which the defendants owned no theatres and the present would be the inability of the major defendants to play their own pictures in their own theatres. The percentage of pictures on the market which any of the five major defendants could play in its own theatres would be relatively small and in nowise approximates a monopoly of film exhibition.[10]

There has however been restraint of competition in exhibition by the five major defendants through ownership of theatres jointly with one another or if their interests be more than five per cent even where jointly held with independents which, in our opinion, calls for a divestiture of such interests whether such partial interest is in fee or through stock ownership or otherwise.

There is no evidence that in a city such as Cincinnati, in which a major defendant owns all of the first-run theatres, other exhibitors, affiliated or unaffiliated, have been prevented from also owning theatres for exhibition on first-run and there consequently is no monopoly in the legal sense, see United States v. Pullman Company, 64 F. Supp. 108, 112, and no reason for directing a divestiture. But when theatres are jointly owned by a major defendant and another party, it is evident that both joint owners wish to participate and indeed are directly or indirectly participating in the business of exhibiting motion pictures. In such case their joining of interests is illegal under the anti-trust laws for the reason that the major defendant thereby eliminates putative competition between itself and the other joint owner, who otherwise would be in a position to operate theatres independently. Such an elimination of competition is unreasonable in view of the defendant's being a powerful factor in the industry capable of exerting vast influence to its ends, and of the methods it has employed to restrain and control normal competition in distributing and exhibiting motion pictures through price-fixing, system of clearances, block-booking, pooling and the other practices we have alluded to.

We find such joint interests in a great number of theatres, a summary of which is set forth below,[11] and hold that they must be terminated by a sale to, or purchase from the co-owner or owners, or by a sale to a party not one of the other defendant-exhibitors. The decree or subsequent orders to be entered in conformity with this opinion will control sales or exchanges of such fractional interests for the purpose of restoring or creating a reasonable competition in the areas in question.

General Considerations

It may be said that such restrictions in commercial dealings as we would impose will interfere with the right of a copyright owner to choose his customers or contract for the disposition of his own property. The answer is that no such absolute right exists where its exercise will involve an extension of a copyright monopoly or an unreasonable interference with competition in the distribution and exhibition of moving pictures. A system of fixed admission prices, clearances and block-booking is so restrictive of competition in its tendency that it should be modified to comply with the terms of the Sherman Act. The modifications in practices we have indicated will relieve conditions that have grown up through the years. Indeed the practices are defended on the ground that business convenience and long usage ought to sanction them. But, in spite of their long continuance, we cannot escape the conclusion that in various ways the system stifles competition and violates the law and that business convenience and loyalty to former customers afford a lame excuse for depriving others of rights to compete and for perpetuating unreasonable restrictions. The remedy we are giving against the infractions is certainly no more drastic in effect than the one the Supreme Court granted in Interstate Circuit v. United States, 306 U. S. 208, nor more severe than the one it imposed in United States v. Crescent Amusement Co., 323 U. S. 173. The defendants have built up great business enterprises in a very popular field. Yet they have carried on practices we have found unduly restrictive of interstate commerce and even though we do not suggest that they any more than "those eighteen upon whom the tower in Siloam fell" have been "sinners above all men," yet measures should be taken to restore the moving picture business to a condition of competition that will benefit both competitors and the general public and to abate practices that are unlawful.

It is argued that the steps we have proposed would involve an interference with commercial practices that are generally acceptable and a hazardous attempt on the part of judges—unfamiliar with the details of business—to remodel its delicate adjustments which have hitherto provided the public with what is a new and great art. But we see nothing ruinous in the remedies proposed. Disputes which may arise under the bidding system are likely to relate to questions whether the bidder has a theatre adequate for the run for which he bids, whether the clearance requested is reasonable as regards his own theatre and those of others, and similar matters generally involved in comparing bids. If the defendants will consent to an arbitration system for the determination of such disputes of the kind that has worked so well under the consent decree, they will facilitate the adjustment of most of the differences that are likely to occur, with a large saving of time and money as compared with separate court actions.

A suit in the district court for violation of the Sherman Act is doubtless an awkward way to cure such ills as have arisen, but it is perhaps the best remedy now available to the government. There surely are evils in the existing system, and the Sherman Act provides a mode of correction which is lawfully invoked. At all events, that which is written is written, and is controlling on us.

It does not follow from the foregoing that we should wholly break up the exhibition business of each of the major defendants even though a "root and branch" decree might be legally possible. Such total divestiture would be injurious to the corporations concerned, and, if we are right in our analysis of the situation, we should still have to give relief against price-fixing, systems of clearance, formula deals, master agreements and franchises, block-booking, pooling agreements, and other agreements we have held invalid. The relief proposed we believe should suffice, while total divestiture would be damaging to the public as well as to the defendants and not accomplish any useful purpose at the present time.

The Decree

A decree is granted in accordance with the views expressed in the foregoing opinion to be settled on ten days' notice. It should provide for the dismissal of all claims asserted by the plaintiff against any of the defendants which act only as producers of motion pictures and for the dismissal of claims against any other defendants based on their acts as producers, whether as individuals or in conjunction with others.

The granting of licenses by any of the defendant-distributors which fix minimum prices for admission to theatres either of the defendants or of any other exhibitor should be enjoined in which such minimum admission prices are fixed by the parties either in writing, or through a committee, or through arbitration, or upon the happening of any event, or in any other wise.

The defendants should be enjoined from concertedly agreeing to maintain a system of clearances as among themselves or with other exhibitors, and no clearances should be granted against theatres in substantial competition with the theatre receiving a license for exhibition in excess of what is reasonably necessary to protect the licensee in the run granted. Existing clearances in excess of what is reasonably necessary to protect the licensees in the runs awarded to them shall be invalid pro tanto. In determining what is a reasonable clearance the following factors should be taken into consideration:

(1) The admission prices of the theatres involved, as set by the exhibitor;

(2) The character and location of the theatres involved, including size, type of entertainment, appointments, transit facilities, etc.;

(3) The policy of operation of the theatres involved, such as the showing of double features, gift nights, give-aways, premiums, cut-rate tickets, lotteries, etc.;

(4) The rental terms and license fees paid by the theatres involved and the revenues derived by the distributor-defendant from such theatres;

(5) The extent to which the theatres involved compete with each other for patronage;

(6) The fact that a theatre involved is affiliated with a defendant-distributor or with an independent circuit of theatres should be disregarded; and

(7) There should be no clearance between theatres not in substantial competition.

The further performance by any of the defendants of existing formula deals, master agreements to the extent that we have previously found them invalid, or franchises should be enjoined, and the defendants should also be enjoined from entering into or carrying out any similar agreements in the future.

Defendants owning a legal or equitable interest in theatres of ninety-five per cent or more either directly or through subsidiaries may exhibit pictures of their own or of their wholly owned subsidiaries in such theatres upon such terms as to admission prices and clearances and on such runs as they see fit.

No defendant or its subsidiaries shall exhibit its films other than on its own behalf or through wholly owned subsidiaries, or subsidiaries in which it has an interest of at least ninety-five per cent, without offering the license at a minimum price for any run desired by the operators of each theatre within the competitive area. The license desired shall in such case be granted to the highest responsible bidder having a theatre of a size and equipment adequate to show the picture upon the terms offered. The license shall be granted solely upon the merits and without discrimination in favor of affiliates, old customers, or any person whatever. Each license shall be offered and taken theatre by theatre and picture by picture. No contracts for exhibition shall be entered into, or if already outstanding shall be performed, in which the license to exhibit one feature is conditioned upon an agreement of the licensee to take a license of one or more other features, but licenses to exhibit more than one feature may be included in a single instrument provided the licensee shall have had the opportunity to bid for each feature separately and shall have made the best bid for each picture so included. To the extent that any of the pictures have not been trade-shown prior to the granting of a license for more than a single picture, the licensee shall be given by the licensor the right to reject a percentage of such pictures not trade-shown prior to the granting of the license to be fixed by the decree. But that right to reject any picture must be exercised within ten days after there has been an opportunity afforded to the licensee to inspect it.

The defendants shall be enjoined from entering into or continuing to perform existing pooling agreements whereby given theatres of two or more exhibitors, normally in competition, are operated as a unit or whereby the business policies of such exhibitors are collectively determined by a joint committee, or by one of the exhibitors, or whereby profits of the "pooled" theatres are divided among the owners according to pre-agreed percentages. They shall also be enjoined from making or continuing to perform agreements that the parties may not acquire other theatres in the competitive area without first offering them for inclusion in the pool. The making or continuance of leases of theatres under which defendants lease any of their theatres to another defendant or to an independent operating a theatre in the competitive area in return for a share of the profits shall be enjoined.

Each defendant shall cease and desist from ownership of an interest in any theatre, whether in fee or in stock or otherwise, in conjunction with another defendant-exhibitor. Each defendant shall cease and desist from ownership, jointly with an independent, of an interest in any theatre, greater than five per cent, unless such defendant's interest is ninety-five per cent or more; and where the interest of such defendant is more than five per cent and less than ninety-five per cent, such joint interests shall be dissolved either by a sale to, or by a purchase from, such co-owner or co-owners. Rearrangements of such joint interests with an independent, if by purchase, shall, however, be subject to the direction of this court so that their effectuation may promote competition in the exhibition of motion pictures. Where a defendant owns a ninety-five or greater per cent interest in any theatre, such theatre may be considered as its own so far as this opinion and the decree to be entered hereon are concerned. Each of the defendants shall be enjoined from expanding its theatre holdings except for the purpose of acquiring a co-owner's interest in jointly owned theatres, and this only in cases where the court shall permit such acquisition, instead of requiring an outright sale of the undivided interest of the defendant in question. The foregoing provision as to divestiture of partial interests in theatres shall apply both to interests held in fee and beneficially and to those represented by shares of stock. But it shall not prevent a defendant from acquiring theatres or interests therein in order to protect its investments, or in order to enter a competitive field; if in the latter case, this court or other competent authority shall approve the acquisition after due application is made therefor.

Each defendant shall be enjoined from operating, booking or film-buying through any agent who is also acting in such matters for any other exhibitor, independent or affiliated.

The decree shall also provide for arbitration of disputes as to bids, clearances, runs, and any other subjects appropriate for arbitration in respect to all parties who may consent to the creation of such tribunals for adjustment of such disputes. It shall also provide for an appeal board generally similar to the one created by the consent decree as to any parties consenting thereto. It shall make such disposition of the provisions of the existing consent decree signed November 30, 1940, as may be necessary in view of the foregoing opinion.

In order to secure compliance with the decree to be entered, duly authorized representatives of the Department of Justice shall on the written request of the Attorney General or the Assistant Attorney General in charge of anti-trust matters, and on reasonable notice to the defendant or defendants affected, be permitted reasonable access to all books and papers of the defendants and reasonable opportunity to interview their officers, or employees, as provided in Section XVIII of the Consent Decree.

Proceedings under the decree to be entered shall be stayed pending appeal or for the purpose of enabling the parties to adjust their business without an unfair burden or as practice may require upon such terms as the decree shall provide.

Jurisdiction of this cause shall be retained for the purpose of enabling any of the parties to the decree to apply to the court at any time for such orders or directions as may be necessary or appropriate for the construction or carrying out of the same, for the enforcement of compliance therewith, and for the punishment of violations thereof, or for other or further relief.

Findings should be proposed by the parties for the assistance of the court, but such proposed findings will form no part of the record.

MEMORANDUM IN RE FINDINGS AND DECREE

In order to meet some of the objections raised at the hearing to the system of bidding for features described in the opinion of the court, we have modified the system there proposed so that competitive bidding will only be necessary within a competitive area and in such an area where it is desired by the exhibitors. In other words, the decree provides an opportunity to bid for any exhibitor in a competitive area who may desire to do so.

The arrangement for arbitration and an appeal board has been terminated except as to unfinished litigations and other matters referred to in the decree, because of the unwillingness of some of the parties to consent to their continuance. Nevertheless, as we have indicated in the opinion, these tribunals have dealt with trade disputes, particularly those as to clearances and runs, with rare efficiency, as both government counsel and counsel for other parties have conceded.

Indeed, the arbitration system set up under the consent decree of November 20, 1940, was created pursuant to the prayer of the amended and supplemental complaint by the United States filed November 14, 1940, in which, among other things, the plaintiff prayed that "a nation-wide system of impartial arbitration tribunals or such other means of enforcement as the court may deem proper be established pursuant to the final decree of this court in order to secure adequate enforcement of whatever general and nation-wide prohibitions of illegal practices may be contained therein."

We strongly recommend that some such system be continued in order to avoid cumbersome and dilatory court litigation and to preserve the practical advantages of the tribunals created by the consent decree.

Pictures, Inc.; Warner Bros. Pictures Distributing Corporation [formerly known as Vitagraph, Inc.]; Twentieth-Century Fox Film Corporation; Columbia Pictures Corporation; Columbia Pictures of Louisiana, Inc.; Universal Corporation; Universal Film Exchanges, Inc.; Big U Film Exchange, Inc.; and United Artists Corporation; and the successors of each of them, and any and all individuals who act in behalf of any thereof with respect to the matters enjoined, and each corporation in which said defendants or any of them own a direct or indirect stock interest of more than fifty per cent, is hereby enjoined:

1. From granting any license in which minimum prices for admission to a theatre are fixed by the parties, either in writing or through a committee, or through arbitration, or upon the happening of any event or in any manner or by any means.

2. From agreeing with each other or with any exhibitors or distributors to maintain a system of clearances; the term "clearances" as used herein meaning the period of time stipulated in license contracts which must elapse between runs of the same feature within a particular area or in specified theatres.

3. From granting any clearance between theatres not in substantial competition.

4. From granting or enforcing any clearance against theatres in substantial competition with the theatre receiving the license for exhibition in excess of what is reasonably necessary to protect the licensee in the run granted. Whenever any clearance provision is attacked as not legal under the provisions of this decree, the burden shall be upon the distributor to sustain the legality thereof.

5. From further performing any existing franchise to which it is a party and from making any franchises in the future. The term "franchise" as used herein means a licensing agreement or series of licensing agreements, entered into as a part of the same transaction, in effect for more than one motion picture season and covering the exhibition of pictures released by one distributor during the entire period of agreement.

6. From making or further performing any formula deal or master agreement to which it is a party. The term "formula deal" as used herein means a licensing agreement with a circuit of theatres in which the license fee of a given feature is measured for the theatres covered by the agreement by a specified percentage of the feature's national gross. The term "master agreement" means a licensing agreement, also known as a "blanket deal" covering the exhibition of features in a number of theatres usually comprising a circuit.

7. From performing or entering into any license in which the right to exhibit one feature is conditioned upon the licensee's taking one or more other features. To the extent that any of the features have not been trade shown prior to the granting of the license for more than a single feature, the licensee shall be given by the licensor the right to reject twenty per cent of such features not trade shown prior to the granting of the license, such right of rejection to be exercised in the order of release within ten days after there has been an opportunity afforded to the licensee to inspect the feature.

8. From licensing in the future any feature for exhibition in any theatre, not its own, in any manner except the following:

(a) A license to exhibit each feature released for public exhibition in any competitive area shall be offered to the operator of each theatre in such area who desires to exhibit it on some run [other than that upon which such feature is to be exhibited in the theatre of the licensor] selected by such operator, and upon uniform terms;

(b) Each license shall be granted solely upon the merits and without discrimination in favor of affiliates, old customers or others;

(c) Where a run is desired, or is to be offered, upon terms which exclude simultaneous exhibition in competing theatres, the distributor shall notify, not less than thirty days in advance of the date when bids will be received, all exhibitors in the competitive area, offering to license the features upon one or more runs, and in such offer shall state the amount of a flat rental as the minimum for such license for a specified number of days of exhibition, the time when the exhibition is to commence and the availability and clearance, if any, which will be granted for each such run. Within fifteen days after receiving such notice, any exhibitor in such competitive area may bid for such license, and in his bid shall state what run such exhibitor desires and what he is willing to pay for such feature, which statement may specify a flat rental, or a percentage of gross receipts, or both, or any other form of rental, and shall also specify what clearance such exhibitor is willing to accept, the time and days when such exhibitor desires to exhibit it, and any other offers which such exhibitor may care to make. The distributor may reject all offers made for any such feature, but in the event of the acceptance of any, the distributor shall grant such license upon the run bid for to the highest responsible bidder, having a theatre of a size, location and equipment adequate to yield a reasonable return to the licensor. The method of licensing specified in this subdivision shall not be required in areas where there is no competition among theatres or in run, or in which there is no offer made by any exhibitor within the time above mentioned. The words "exclude simultaneous exhibition" shall be held to mean the exhibition of a specified run in one theatre with clearance over other theatres in the competitive area. The words "competitive area" shall refer to the territory occupied by more than one theatre in which it may fairly and reasonably be said that such theatres compete with each other for the exhibition of features on any run.

(e) A theatre is not a defendant's own theatre unless it owns therein a legal or equitable interest of ninety-five per cent or more, either directly or through affiliates or subsidiaries.

9. From arbitrarily refusing the demand of an exhibitor, who operates a theatre in competition with another theatre not owned or operated by a defendant distributor, or its affiliate or subsidiary, made by registered mail, addressed to the home office of the distributor, to license a feature to him for exhibition on a run selected by the exhibitor, instead of licensing it to another exhibitor for exhibition in his competing theatre on such run. Such demand shall be deemed to have been refused either upon the receipt by the exhibitor of a refusal in writing or upon the expiration of ten days after the receipt of the exhibitor's demand.

III.

Each of the defendant exhibitors, Paramount Pictures, Inc., Loew's, Incorporated, Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation, Keith-Albee-Orpheum Corporation, RKO Proctor Corporation, RKO Midwest Corporation, Warner Bros. Pictures, Warner Bros. Circuit Management Corporation,

Twentieth Century Fox Film Corporation, and National Theatres, Inc., is hereby enjoined and restrained:

(1) From performing or enforcing agreements referred to in paragraphs 5 and 6 of the foregoing section II hereof to which it may be a party.

(2) From making or continuing to perform pooling agreements whereby given theatres of two or more exhibitors normally in competition are operated as a unit or whereby the business policies of such exhibitors are collectively determined by a joint committee or by one of the exhibitors or whereby profits of the "pooled" theatres are divided among the owners according to prearranged percentages.

(3) From making or continuing to perform agreements that the parties may not acquire other theatres in a competitive area where a pool operates without first offering them for inclusion in the pool.

(4) From making or continuing leases of theatres under which it leases any of its theatres to another defendant or to an independent operating a theatre in the same competitive area in return for a share of the profits.

(5) From continuing to own or acquiring any beneficial interest in any theatre, whether in fee or shares of stock or otherwise, in conjunction with another defendant, and from continuing to own or acquire such an interest in conjunction with an independent [meaning any former, present or putative motion picture theatre operator which is not owned or controlled by the defendant holding the interest in question,] where such interest shall be greater than five per cent unless such interest shall be ninety-five per cent or more. The existing relationships which violate this provision shall be terminated within two years. The relationships between the defendants and independents which violate this provision shall be terminated by a sale to, or purchase from the co-owner or co-owners, or by a sale to a party not one of the other defendants. In dissolving relationships among defendants and between defendants and independents which violate this provision, one defendant may acquire the interest of another defendant or independent if such defendant desiring to acquire such interest shall show to the satisfaction of the court, and the court shall first find, that such acquisition will not unduly restrain competition in the exhibition of feature motion pictures. Each of the defendants shall submit to this court within six months a statement outlining the extent to which it has complied and the manner in which it proposes to comply with this provision, setting forth in detail the names, locations, and general descriptions of the theatres, corporate securities, and beneficial interests of any kind involved, the sales thereof that it has made, and such interests as it proposes to acquire, with a statement of facts regarding each competitive situation involved in such proposed acquisition sufficient to show the probable effect of such acquisition on that situation. Similar reports shall be made quarterly thereafter until this provision shall have been fully complied with. Reasonable notice of such acquisition plans shall be served upon the Attorney General and plaintiff shall be given an opportunity to be heard with respect thereto before any such acquisition shall be approved by the court.

(6) From expanding its present theatre holdings in any manner whatsoever except as permtited in the preceding paragraph.

(7) From operating, booking, or buying features for any of its theatres through any agent who is known by it to be also acting in such manner for any other exhibitor, independent or affiliate.

IV.

Nothing contained in this Decree shall be construed to limit, in any way whatsoever, the right of each distributor-defendant to license, or in any way to arrange or provide for, the exhibition of any or all the motion pictures which it may at any time distribute, in such manner, and upon such terms, and subject to such conditions as may be satisfactory to it, in any theatre in which such distributor-defendant has or may acquire pursuant to the terms of this Decree, a proprietary interest of ninety-five per cent or more either directly or through subsidiaries.

V.

The provisions of the existing consent decree are hereby declared to be of no further force or effect, except insofar as may be necessary to conclude arbitration proceedings now pending and to liquidate in an orderly manner the financial obligations of the defendants and the American Arbitration Association, incurred in the establishment of the consent decree arbitration systems. Existing awards and those made pursuant to pending proceedings shall continue to be enforceable. But this shall in no way preclude the parties or any other persons from setting up a reasonable system of arbitration either through the use of the present boards or any others as among themselves.

VI.

For the purpose of securing compliance with this Decree, and for no other purpose, duly authorized representatives of the Department of Justice shall, on written request of the Attorney General or the Assistant Attorney General in charge of antitrust matters, and on notice to any defendant, reasonable as to time and subject matter, made to such defendant as its principal office, and subject to any legally recognized privilege, (1) be permitted reasonable access, during the office hours of such defendant, to all books, ledgers, accounts, correspondence, memoranda and other records and documents in the possession or under the control of such defendant, relating to any of the matters contained in this Decree, and that during the times that the plaintiff shall desire such access, counsel for such defendant may be present, and (2) subject to the reasonable convenience of such defendant, and without restraint or interference from it, be permitted to interview its officers or employees regarding any such matters, at which interview counsel for the officer or employee interviewed and counsel for such defendant company may be present.

Information obtained pursuant to the provisions of this section shall not be divulged by any representative of the Department of Justice to any person other than a duly authorized representative of the Department of Justice, except in the course of legal proceedings to which the United States is a party, or as otherwise required by law.

VII.

Paragraphs 7 and 8 of section II of this judgment shall not become effective until July 1, 1947.

VIII.

Jurisdiction of this cause is retained for the purpose of enabling any of the parties to the judgment and no others, to apply to the court at any time for such orders or direction as may be necessary or appropriate for the construction, modification, or carrying out of the same, for the enforcement of compliance therewith, and for the punishment of violations thereof, or for other or further relief.

IX.

The operation of this judgment is stayed for sixty days from the date hereof, and, if an appeal is taken, for thirty days thereafter in order to enable any appellant to move before the Supreme Court for a stay in respect to any portion of the judgment from which an appeal has been taken.

The Issues and the Rulings Below

The original complaint in this action was filed on or about the 20th day of July, 1938. An amended complaint was filed on November 14, 1940. In these complaints the Government sued eight of the principal producers and distributors of motion pictures in the United States (including appellant), claiming a violation of Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act and charging the defendants with having combined and conspired with each other in the production, distribution and exhibition of motion pictures in the United States. Five of the defendants (Paramount Pictures, Inc., RKO Radio Pictures, Inc., Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc., Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation and Loew's Incorporated) are engaged in the production, distribution and exhibition of motion pictures; that is to say, in addition to producing and distributing motion pictures they own and operate respectively chains of theatres and occasionally referred to as "major" defendants.

The three other defendants (which includes appellant) (Columbia Pictures Corporation, Universal Pictures Company, Inc. and United Artists Corporation) do not own or operate theatres.

Plaintiff alleged that the illegal restraints were brought about by reason of (1) franchise agreements, under which the defendants granted exhibitor the right to exhibit pictures of more than one season's product; (2) pooling arrangements, under which the major defendants pooled their theatres with each other or with third parties; (3) block booking, under which defendants sold a season's product in advance of production; (4) preferential run, by which defendants' theatres were favored with respect to first run exhibitions and obtained a monopoly of the playing time in the better theatres; (5) unreasonable clearance, by means of which defendants' theatres obtained more protection than was necessary in the exhibition of their pictures as a consequence of which independent theatres were relegated to an inferior and unprofitable run; (6) minimum admission prices, under which the defendants compelled independent exhibitors to keep up admission prices, thereby resulting in a favored position to the affiliated theatres. By its answer appellant denied each and every conclusory allegation of wrongdoing and each and every allegation of fact in support thereof.

While complaining of all of these practices in the industry and seeking injunction, the Government also demanded that the five major defendants be divested of their holdings in their theatres, and that they be compelled to confine themselves in the future only to the production and distribution of motion pictures.

The first trial of this case was commenced on June 3, 1940, and lasted a week. Before any testimony was taken, however, the parties got together at the suggestion of Judge Henry Goddard, who presided, and a consent decree was finally agreed upon between the five major defendants and the Government and was filed November 20, 1940. The three minor defendants (Columbia, United Artists and Universal) refused to be a party to such consent decree. Under that consent decree the consenting defendants agreed to trade-show their pictures and to license them in blocks of no more than five. A system of arbitration was instituted under which exhibitors complaining of unreasonable clearance were given an opportunity to arbitrate that question. That decree was to be in effect for three years, after which the Government was at liberty to go on with the trial. Columbia and Universal continued to license their season's product in advance as theretofore. (United Artists, merely acting as an agency for independent producers, has never block-booked.)

At the expiration of the three-year period the Government decided to continue with the trial. It asked for and obtained an order for an Expediting Court, and Circuit Judge Augustus N. Hand, together wtih District Judges Henry Goddard and John Bright, were appointed as such court and have acted as such ever since.

On October 8, 1945, the trial of the case was resumed before the Expediting Court. It lasted until November 20, 1945. The Government abandoned any attempt to prove a monopoly in production of motion pictures. In attempting to prove the other allegations of its amended complaint the Government confined itself to the production of statistics, data, contracts and correspondence theretofore furnished to it for the most part by the defendants themselves pursuant to interrogatories. It called no witnesses whatever. There are approximately 400 exhibits in the case.

The trial having concluded on November 20, 1945, briefs were thereafter submitted by the parties in January, 1946. On July 11, 1946, the District Court handed down its opinion, in which it found each and all of the defendants to have violated Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act. In effect it held that all of the usages and customs heretofore enumerated and of which the Government complained were illegal and should be restrained. The Court, however, stated that it felt that divestiture was too drastic a remedy, and it refused the Government's plea in that respect. This opinion is annexed hereto as Appendix "A".

Thereafter appellant, the Government and the other defendants submitted proposed findings and decree. Appellant submitted forty-four findings and two conclusions of law. Hearings were held by the Court on the proposed findings and decree, and on December 31, 1946, the Court made and filed its findings of fact and conclusions of law and its decree. Concurrently with the filing of the findings and decree on December 31, 1946, the Court filed a supplementary opinion, a copy of which is hereto annexed as Appendix "B". The decree substantially follows the Court's June opinion (Exhibit "A").

On January 10, 1947, appellants filed a motion pursuant to Rule 52(b) of the Rules of Civil Procedure:

To strike out the last sentence of paragraph 4 of Section H, and that said paragraph shall read as follows:

> "4. From granting or enforcing any clearance against theatres in substantial competition with the theatre receiving the license for exhibition in excess of what is reasonably necessary to protect the licensee in the run granted."

To amend Section VII to read as follows:

"Paragraph 7 of Sect. II of this Judgment shall not become effective until July 1, 1947.

Paragraphs 8(a) and 8(c) of Sect. II of this Judgment shall not become effective until July 1, 1947, but in the event of an Appeal to the Supreme Court by any party from these Paragraphs, such Paragraphs shall not become effective until ninety (90) days after the entry of final Judgment upon the mandate of the Supreme Court."

In that month the other defendants filed various motions to amend the findings and decree. On February 3, 1947, these motions were denied in part and granted in part, as appears by the short memorandum opinions handed down by the Court and hereto annexed as Appendix "C." Appellant's motion was denied in toto.

The Questions Involved Are Substantial

The questions raised by this appeal relate to the sufficiency of the evidence upon which the Court made its findings of fact and conclusions of law to support the conclusions that the appellant United Artists Corporation violated the Sherman Act, and the propriety of the relief granted by the District Court and the power of the Court to grant such relief.

1. The first substantial question raised by this appeal involves the propriety of an injunction which deprives the appellant United Artists Corporation from granting any license for the exhibition of its motion pictures in which the minimum admission price to be charged by such license is stipulated in the license agreement.

The appellant United Artists Corporation as the copyright proprietors of its motion pictures does not at any time in its license agreement with the licensee part with title. In the case at bar no commodity is sold, no resale price is fixed. The exhibition license is in the nature of a performing right; that is, the res is a copyrighted motion picture. To protect the reward the distributor, the proprietor of the copyright, has stipulated with the licensee the minimum admission price to be charged for the exhibition of the copyrighted motion picture in the exhibitor's theatre. The Court has held this to be illegal, despite the fact that the undisputed evidence is that the exhibitor determined the actual admission price charged at his theatre and that such admission price did not vary with the particular picture exhibited, and no inference should have been drawn that the stipulation of a minimum admission price in the license agreement made the defendants guilty of a conspiracy to fix theatre admission prices.

The Court, in enjoining the making and performances of such licenses, has deprived the appellant of well established property rights as well as rights conferred by the Copyright Law.

Black v. Henry G. Allen Co., 42 Fed. 618;
Bement v. National Harrow Co., 181 U. S. 70;
U. S. v. General Electrical Co., 272 U. S. 476;
Interstate Circuit, Inc., v. U. S., 306 U. S. 208; Westway Theatres v. Twentieth Century-Fox, 30 Fed. Supp. 830.

2. The second substantial question involved relates to the propriety of the finding of this Court on the evidence before it, that the appellant United Artists Corporation has acted in concert with the distributor defendants in the formation of a uniform system of clearances for the theatres to which it licensed its films. The Court inferred a conspiracy among the distributor defendants from similarity of clearance granted to a given exhibitor by the various defendant exhibitors. The undisputed evidence showed that this similarity was due entirely to competitive factors rather than to any agreement or understanding amongst the distributor defendants.

3. The third substantial question involved in this appeal is the propriety of the Court's enjoining clearance which was reasonably calculated to protect the licensor's revenue and confining clearance agreements in the future to those calculated to protect the licensee in the run granted. The undisputed evidence is that the distributor has a legitimate interest of its own to protect. The Court specifically found in its Findings of Fact Nos. 77 and 78 that clearance reasonable in time and area was essential in the distribution as well as in the exhibition of motion pictures.

It was erroneous for the Court to decree that, whenever any clearance provision is attacked as not legal under the provisions of this decree, the burden of proof shall be upon the distributor to sustain the legality thereof. This completely changes the fundamental rule of evidence that the one who alleges should have the burden of proving. There is no evidence in this case to warrant such a change in the rules of evidence by judicial fiat and such attempts by the Court to place the burden of proof upon one of the parties to a decree has been rejected by the Supreme Court (Hartford Empire Co. v. U. S., 323 U. S. 386, 432).

4. The fourth substantial question involved in this appeal is the propriety of a decree enjoining the appellant United Artists Corporation from taking into consideration as one of the factors in determining to whom to license its pictures the fact that the appellant United Artists Corporation has had satisfactory relationships with such exhibitor in the past, and which deprives those old customers of competitive advantages legitimately acquired through longstanding satisfactory business relationships.

The effect of this is to take away from the appellant United Artists Corporation, the copyright proprietor of motion pictures, the right to designate the goods it is willing to sell, and to choose its own customers, and the right of those customers to continue business relations with the appellant (United States v. Colgate, 250 U. S. 300; Great Atlantic and Pacific Tea Co. v. Cream of Wheat, 227 Fed. 46; Westway v. Twentieth Century-Fox, 113 F. (2d) 932; Federal Trade Commission v. Grate, 253 U. S. 421; Greater N. Y. Film Rental Co. v. Biograph, 203 Fed. 39).

5. The fifth substantial question involves the propriety of a decree enjoining the defendants from performing any existing franchises to which it is a party or from making any franchises in the future.

The Court erred in concluding such agreements to be illegal per. se. The evidence shows as to franchises that this type of licensing agreement or series of licensing agreements entered into with an exhibitor for more than one picture season covering the exhibition of pictures released by one distributor during the entire period of the agreement, insured the independent exhibitor product for his theatre, did not restrain trade, and provided the non-theatre-owning defendants additional outlets for their product.

6. The sixth substantial question involved in this appeal concerns the propriety of making regulations and restrictions with respect to the licensing of appellant's pictures by setting up what it has described as a system of competitive bidding. This regulatory system is set out in detail in paragraphs 7, 8 and 9 of Section II of the decree.

The Sherman Act provides for injunctions against the continuance of practices found unlawful; it does not authorize the Court to prescribe affirmative ways of doing business. This is a legislative function, not a judicial one.

United States v. Pullman, 50 Fed. Supp. 123, 136;
United States v. Reading Company, 183 Fed. 459, aff'd and md. 226 U. S. 324;
Hartford Empire Company v. United States, 323 U. S. 386.

The extent to which the Court's findings and judgment rest on these erroneous rulings raises substantial questions which should be reviewed by this Court. Appellant United Artists Corporation is of the belief that all the questions here raised are substantial and respectfully petitions this Court to pass on them after plenary hearing.

Respectfully submitted,

O'Brien, Driscoll & Raftery, Counsel for United Artists Corporation, Appellant.

AUGUSTUS N. HAND, Circuit Judge:

The United States brought suit under Section 4 of the Act of Congress of July 2, 1890, entitled "An Act to Protect Trade and Commerce against Unlawful Restraints and Monopolies", commonly known as the Sherman Act, in order to prevent alleged violations by the defendants of Sections 1 and 2 of that Act.

The following is a general description of the defendants:

1. The five major defendants—Paramount Pictures, Inc., Loew's, Incorporated, Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation, Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc., and Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation, and their subsidiaries—were charged in the amended and supplemental complaint with combining and conspiring unreasonably to restrain trade and commerce in the production, distribution and exhibition of motion pictures and to monopolize such trade and commerce in violation of the Sherman Act. The three minor defendants—Columbia Pictures Corporation, Universal Corporation, and their subsidiaries, which are producers and distributors, and not exhibitors, and United Artists Corporation, which is a distributor only, were likewise charged with combining and conspiring with the five major defendants and with each other unreasonably to restrain and to monopolize trade and commerce in motion pictures. As it appeared upon the trial that there was no violation of the Sherman Act in respect to production of motion pictures and that there was on the contrary active competition in production, the charge in respect to production was formally abandoned by the plaintiff. The issues therefore are whether there has been illegal restraints or monopolization in the distribution and exhibition of motion pictures.

The plaintiff contends that an illegal conspiracy and monopoly were effected by: (1) concertedly fixing the license terms before the licensees have had a fair opportunity to estimate the value and character of the films licensed and before such films were completed or shown; (2) concertedly fixing the run, clearance, and minimum admission price terms on which an exhibitor may show pictures through license agreements covering periods of a year or more; (3) concertedly conditioning the licensing of one film or group of films upon the licensing of another film or group of films and by conditioning the licensing of films in one theatre or group of theatres upon the licensing of films in other theatres or group of theatres; (4) concertedly discriminating with respect to the license terms granted to theatres in large circuits because such theatres are part of a circuit. The means of such discrimination are said to be the licensing for exhibition in theatres of the five defendant exhibitors of runs ahead of those granted to competing independent exhibitors, and the continuance of these prior runs from season to season to the prejudice of independent exhibitors. As a result independent exhibitors are systematically excluded from the opportunity to procure preferred runs of pictures distributed by the defendants in the localities in which defendants' theatres operate and at times refused any run at all in order to protect defendants' theatres from competition.

It is further charged by the plaintiff that the distributor-exhibitor defendants have combined with each other: (1) by conditioning the licensing of film distributed by one defendant in theatres operated by another upon the licensing of films distributed by the latter in the theatres operated by the former; (2) by excluding independently produced films from affiliated theatres and by excluding unaffiliated exhibitors from competing with first run or other run theatres in cities and towns where affiliated theatres are located; (3) by excluding unaffiliated exhibitors from operating theatres on the same run as affiliated exhibitors; (4) by using the first and early runs of affiliated theatres to control the film supply, runs, clearances and admission prices of operators of competing unaffiliated theatres in cities and towns in which affiliated theatres are located; (5) by pooling or otherwise sharing with each other the profits of affiliated theatres owned or controlled by two or more exhibitor defendants located in the same competitive area and frequently by together operating on the same run in cases where they would be in competition with one another except for such pooling or profit sharing agreements; (6) by effecting a division of the territory of the entire United States among them for theatre operating purposes.

The amended and supplemental complaint prays: (1) That each of the contracts, combinations and conspiracies in restraint of trade, together with attemp's to monopolize the same, be declared illegal; (2) that the defendants and their subsidiaries be perpetually enjoined from continuing to carry out attempts at monopolization and all restraints of trade in distribution and exhibition of motion pictures; (3) that a nation-wide system of impartial arbitration tribunals, or such other means of enforcement as the court may deem proper, be established in order to secure adequate enforcement of whatever general and nation-wide prohibitions of illegal practices may be contained in the decree; (4) that the five major defendants and their subsidiaries be directed to divest themselves of all interest and ownership, both direct and indirect, in any theatres which the court shall find to have been used by one or more of them unreasonably to restrain trade and commerce in motion pictures.

After the amended and supplemental complaint was filed, the plaintiff and the five major defendants and their subsidiary corporations that were parties to the suit, executed a written consent to the entry of a decree by the District Court, signed November 20, 1940. A decree was made in accordance with the consent reciting that no testimony had been taken, that no provision of the decree should be construed as an admission or adjudication that any of the plaintiff's charges were true, or that the consenting defendants had violated any law, or that the doing or the failure to do any of the acts or things enjoined or directed to be done would constitute a violation of law.

The decree enjoined the consenting defendants as follows:

(1) No distributor defendant shall license feature motion pictures for public exhibition within the United States at which an admission fee is to be charged until the feature has been trade shown within the exchange district in which the exhibition is to be held.

(2) No distributor defendant shall offer for license or shall license more than five features in a single group. The license of one group of features shall not be conditioned upon the licensing of another feature or group of features, nor shall any distributor defendant require an exhibitor to license shorts, reissues, westerns, or foreigns as a condition of licensing other features. Disputes as to violation of these provisions shall be subject to arbitration. The power of the arbitrator shall be limited to a determination of whether the offer to license or the license was conditioned and, if found to be conditioned, to imposing a penalty against the distributor of not to exceed $500.

(3) No license for features to be exhibited in theatres located in one exchange district shall include theatres located in another exchange district.

(4) No distributor defendant shall refuse to license its pictures for exhibition in an exhibitor's theatre on some run to be designated by the distributor upon terms and conditions fixed by the distributor, if the exhibitor can satisfy reasonable minimum standards of theatre operation and is reputable and responsible, unless the granting of a run on any terms will have the effect of reducing the distributor's total film revenue in the competitive area in which such exhibitor's theatre is located. Controversies arising from a complaint by an exhibitor for violation of the foregoing provision shall be subject to arbitration under which an award based on a finding of violation shall direct the distributor to offer its pictures to the complainant on a run to be designated by the distributor, and upon terms fixed by the distributor, which are not calculated to defeat the purposes of this subdivision.

(5) Controversies arising from the complaint of an exhibitor that a feature licensed by a distributor defendant for exhibition in a particular theatre is generally offensive in the locality on moral, religious, or racial grounds shall be subject to arbitration, and, if the feature shall be found to be thus offensive, an award shall be made cancelling the license in so far as it relates to the exhibition of the feature in that theatre.

(6) Controversies arising upon the complaint of an exhibitor that the clearance applicable to his theatre is unreasonable shall be subject to arbitration. Reasonable clearance as to time and area was stipulated and held by the consent decree to be essential to the distribution and exhibition of motion pictures. In determining whether a clearance complained of is unreasonable the arbitrator should consider the historical development of clearance in the area, the admission price of the theatres involved; their character, location, and type of entertainment; the rental terms and license fees paid by them; the extent to which they compete for patronage, and all other business considerations except affiliation of the theatres with a distributor or with a circuit of theatres. If the clearance be found unreasonable, the award shall fix the maximum clearance between the theatres involved, which may be granted in licenses thereafter entered into by a distributor that is party to the arbitration. The award may also fix, subject to the provisions of Section XVII of the consent decree, such maximum clearance under any existing franchise, i.e., a licensing agreement, or a series of licensing agreements, covering more than one motion picture season and covering the exhibition of pictures released by the distributor during the entire period of the agreement. Nothing contained in this subdivision, nor any award in arbitration, shall restrict the exhibitor's right to license for any theatre any run which it is able to negotiate, nor shall restrict the distributor's right to license any run which it desires to grant, nor to license the exhibition of any special feature under a contract the terms of which, including provisions for clearance, are applicable only thereto.

(7) Controversies arising upon a complaint by an independent exhibitor that a distributor defendant has arbitrarily refused to license its features for exhibition on the run requested by the exhibitor in one of the latter's theatres shall be subject to arbitration, but the making of any award is to be subject to certain specified conditions and no award made shall affect the license to exhibit any features then under license, but only future licenses.

(8) For three years after the entry of the decree, the consenting defendants are to notify the Department of Justice of any legally binding commitment for the acquisition of any theatre or theatres. During such period, each defendant is to report monthly the changes in its theatre position together with a statement for the reason of such changes. For three years following the entry of the decree, no consenting defendant shall enter upon a general program of expanding its theatre holdings. Nothing shall prevent any such defendant from acquiring theatres or interests therein to protect its investment or its competitive position or for ordinary purposes of its business.

(9) The decree shall not be construed to limit, impair or alter the right of a distributor to license the exhibition of motion pictures, subject to such terms as may be satisfactory to it, (a) in any theatre in which, or in the proceeds of which, it is directly or indirectly interested; (b) in any theatre an interest in which of not less than 50% is acquired after the date of the decree and which it owns at the time of such license, and (c) in any theatre of which a company in which the defendant owned not less than 42% of the common stock at the date of the decree and at the time of such license acquires after the date of the decree and owns at the time of such license a financial interest of not less than 50%.

(10) Except as otherwise expressly and specifically provided in the decree, nothing therein shall be construed to limit the right of any distributor to select its own customers, bargain with them in accordance with law, or negotiate with or license to or accept any offer from any exhibitor to license its motion pictures or any number thereof, upon such terms and conditions as it deems advisable or to its best interests.

(11) For a period of three years after the entry of the consent decree the plaintiff shall not seek either in this or any other action against the consenting defendants to divorce the production or distribution of motion pictures from their exhibition or to dissolve any defendant or any corporation in which it has directly or indirectly a substantial stock interest and which is engaged in the exhibition of motion pictures, or holds directly or indirectly a substantial stock interest in any corporation so engaged, or to dissolve or break up any circuit of theatres of any such defendant or of any such corporation, or to require any such defendant, corporation or circuit to divest itself of its interests or any thereof in motion picture theatres in which it had an interest at the time of the entry of the decree.

(12) The method and conditions of and the procedure for the arbitration of controversies and the powers of an appeal board created by the court to entertain appeals from the arbitration tribunal are set forth in the decree.

(13) Jurisdiction is retained by the decree for the purpose of enabling any parties to apply to the court at any time more than three years after the date of the entry for any modification thereof.

The three minor defendants and their subsidiaries did not consent to the decree of November 20, 1940, presumably because of their opposition to the provisions requiring trade-showing and prohibiting block-booking of groups of more than five films. It was provided that if the plaintiff did not secure the entry of a decree against the three minor defendants before June 1, 1942, the consenting defendants were to be released from those provisions. Such a decree was in fact not entered by the specified date, and accordingly the sections of the decree regarding trade-showing and block-booking have lapsed. Nevertheless, according to the testimony, the consenting defendants have continued to comply with them.[1]

[1] The following are definitions of terms used in this opinion:

Block-booking—The practice of licensing, or offering for license, one feature, or group of features, upon condition that the exhibitor shall also license another feature or group of features released by the distributor during a given period.

Clearance—The period of time, usually stipulated in license contracts, which must elapse between runs of the same picture within a particular area or in specified theatres

Exchange District—An area in which an office is maintained by a distributor for the purpose of soliciting license agreements for the exhibition of its pictures in theatres situated throughout the territory served by the exchange and for the physical distribution of such films throughout this territory.

Feature—Any motion picture, regardless of topic, the length of the film of which is in excess of 4000 feet.

Formula Deal—A licensing agreement with a circuit of theatres in which the rental price of a given film is measured for the circuit as a whole by a specified percentage of the picture's national gross.

Franchise—A licensing agreement, or series of licensing agreements, entered into as part of the same transaction, in effect for more than one motion picture season and covering the exhibition of pictures released by one distributor during the entire period of the agreement.

Independent—A producer, distributor, or exhibitor, as the context requires, which is not a defendant in this action or a subsidiary or affiliate of a defendant.

Master Agreement—A licensing agreement also known as a "blanket deal", covering the exhibition of films in a number of theatres, usually comprising a circuit.

Motion Picture Season—A one-year period beginning about September 1 of each year.

Road-show—A public exhibition of a motion picture in a limited number of theatres, in advance of its general release, at admission prices higher than those customarily charged in first-run theatres in the areas where they are located.

Runs—The successive exhibitions of a motion picture in a given area, first-run being the first exhibition in that area, second-run being the next subsequent, and so on.

Trade-showing—A private exhibition of a film prior to its release for public exhibition, as required by Section III of the consent decree.

Counsel for the five major defendants and their subsidiaries contend that the consent decree has, in some respects at least, the effect of a final judgment which may not be modified. But we cannot see how such a position is consistent with the language of Section XXIII (d), which permits "* * * any of the parties to this decree to apply to the Court at any time more than three years after the date of the entry of the decree for any modification thereof." That period has expired, and therefore everything relating to rights under and remedies for violation of the Sherman Act is, therefore, open for consideration, even as between consenting parties: and certainly nothing has hitherto been decided which affected the non-consenting parties. It would seem to follow that we cannot bind any parties to subject themselves to the arbitration system or the board of appeals set up in aid of it without their consent, even though we may regard it as desirable that such a system, in view of its demonstrated usefulness, should be continued in aid of the decree which we propose to direct.

The evidence has established various infractions of the Sherman Act on the part of each of the defendants which we shall proceed to discuss.

Price-fixing

The defendants who have granted moving picture licenses have fixed minimum admission prices which the exhibitor agrees to charge irrespective of whether it is to pay a flat rental or a percentage of the theatre receipts. It is said that these minimum admission prices are in general only those currently charged by the exhibitors and that they are placed in the licenses in order to assure the distributor of a minimum revenue when it licenses upon a percentage basis, and also to assure a continuation of the conditions which moved it to grant a given run to the exhibitor.[2]

[2] That the distributor-defendants have more than merely a passive interest, as they claim, in the maintenance of specified minimum prices is shown by their inclusion in the licenses of provisions for severe penalties if less than those prices are charged. Some licenses provide that if the schedule of minimum prices is violated, all existing licenses

Whatever the reason, the various licensing defendants have agreed with their licensees to a system which determines minimum admission prices in all theatres where motion pictures licensed by them are exhibited. In this way are controlled the prices to be charged for most of the motion pictures exhibited either by the defendants, or by independents, within the United States. That the eight defendants distribute most of the features is evident from the record. For example, during the 1943-44 season the eight defendants distributed about 77.6% of all features nationally distributed except "westerns" and low cost productions, and even if the latter inferior and non-competitive pictures are included, they distributed 65.5%. See Plaintiff's Exh. 426; Record p. 2400. The control of distribution closely resembles that appearing in Goldman Theatres, Inc. v. Loew's, Inc., 150 F. 2d 738, 744-5 (C. C. A. 3), where the court said:

> "Defendants control the production and distribution of more than 80% of feature pictures in this country, and no exhibitor can successfully operate without access to defendants' product."[3]

The licenses are in effect price-fixing arrangements among all the distributor-defendants, as well as between such defendants individually and their various exhibitors. Such combinations we hold to be forbidden by the Sherman Act.

The exhibits submitted in this case contain numerous express agreements between the various distributing defendants and their licensees stating the minimum admission prices which licensees are required to maintain in showing the distributors' pictures in the areas concerned. The agreements are not only between the distributor-defendants of the distributor for that theatre may be cancelled at the option of the distributor; other licenses provide that the particular license may be cancelled or that the exhibitor's clearance over subsequent runs be greatly reduced. See Plaintiff's Exhibits 275-290.

[3] The defendants in the Goldman case were substantially the same as those here, except that Universal Corporation was there eliminated by agreement.

and other defendants owning theatres, but also between the distributor-defendants and independent theatre owners. A correlation of these agreements shows that in many instances the minimum prices set forth in the license agreements by the various defendants are in substantial conformity. Indeed, it is conceded in the joint brief filed on behalf of Loew's, Paramount, Warner, RKO and Twentieth Century-Fox that the admission prices included in licenses of the various distributor-defendants are in general uniform, being the usual admission prices currently charged by the exhibitors. At pages 31-2 of the joint brief it is stated:

> "The testimony shows that it is the general practice of all the distributors, whether dealing with independent exhibitors or affiliated ones, to include a provision in the license agreement that the exhibitor shall not charge less than a specified minimum admission price during the exhibition of the particular picture or pictures licensed. * * * The minimum admission price included in the license is not one which the distributor dictates, but is the usual admission price currently charged by the exhibitor. (R. 433, 718, 968, 999, 1382-3.) It is the practice of exhibitors to charge the same scale of admission prices over a period of time and not to change them according to whose pictures are being exhibited or according to any fluctuations in the type of picture."

A similar statement is made at page 18 of the brief of Columbia, and the brief of United Artists and Universal appears to argue on the same assumption at pages 24-39.

It does not seem important whether the distributor was the more controlling factor in determining the minimum admission prices. Whether it was such a factor or merely acceded to the customary prices of the exhibitors, in either event there was a general arrangement of fixing prices in which both distributors and exhibitors were involved. But it is plain that the distributor did more than accede to existing price schedules.[4] The licenses required them to be maintained under severe penalties for infraction, and the evidence shows that the distributors in the case of exceptional features, where not satisfied with current prices, would refuse to grant licenses unless the prices were raised.[5] More-

[4] Regan, vice-president in charge of distribution and sales for Paramount, testified as follows:

"Q. Well, does that (the admission price) fix his right to a particular run or to clearance? A. It would have an influence upon the run and clearance, yes, sir."

"Q. Why would you be interested in the minimum admission price or the admission price charged by the exhibitor in connection with determining what run you would negotiate for? A. Because the admission price that he charges determines the film rental that I can earn for my pictures." Record pp. 718-9.

See also testimony of Kupper in charge of distribution organization of RKO. Record p. 1084.

[5] Testimony of John J. Friedl, president of Minnesota Amusement Company—the stock of which is owned by Paramount, was as follows:

"Q. Are there occasional instances of special attractions where there is a negotiation as to a higher admission price with the distributor? A. That has come up on several occasions. In the case of the picture 'Woodrow Wilson', and several other pictures, they have been released by the distributors as road show attractions, and in those cases the distributors insisted upon road show prices, and it was the option of the purchaser, or the theatre, to buy or not to buy those pictures at those prices; but if he expected to play the picture at that time, he would have to charge such admission price.

"Q. And if he was not willing to advance his admission price to meet the distributor's terms, he had the opportunity to play this picture on regular run, is that right? A. At a later date, that is correct.

"Q. Is the provision for that minimum admission price included not only in license contracts for first-run exhibition but also for subsequent-run exhibition? A. Yes, I think it applies in all cases.

"Q. Is it included in license contracts for percentage pictures and also for flat rental pictures? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. Where the admission price is included for subsequent-run exhibition, does your answer with respect to who determines the admission price apply to that as well? A. That is correct. But, of course, it is reasonable to assume, to understand, that in setting our admission prices, we do not do that on an arbitrary basis because it is reasonable to expect that the larger theatres playing the first-runs would get the maximum price for the protection of the dis-

over, the distributors, when licensing on a percentage basis, were interested in the prices charged and even when licensing for a flat rental were interested in admission prices to be charged for subsequent runs which they might license on a percentage basis. Likewise all of the five major defendants had a definite interest in keeping up prices in any given territory in which they owned theatres, and this interest they were safeguarding by fixing minimum prices in their licenses when distributing their films to indpendent exhibitors in those areas. Even if the licenses were at a flat rate, a failure to require their licensees to maintain fixed prices would leave them free by lowering the current charge to decrease through competition the income in the licensors' own theatres in the neighborhood. The whole system presupposed a fixing of prices by all parties concerned in all competitive areas.

The similarity of specified minimum prices prescribed for the same theatres in the distributor-defendants' contracts of license is shown by the following table collated from exhibits in evidence.[8] The exhibits used to prepare the table contained answers of the defendants to plaintiff's interrogatories about the first block of five features licensed for the 1943-44 season by each of the five major distributor-defendants, and about the first five pictures licensed by each of the three minor defendants, and about that picture of each defendant which during the season received the most billings in the United States.

tributor and the producer. And in the secondary houses the prices are less.

"Q. That is, generally speaking, the first-run houses charge a higher price than subsequent-run, and then the prices step down among the runs? A. That is correct." Record p. 1000.

[8] This table is derived from Plaintiff's Exhibits 41, 42, 57 (1-49), 82, 94, 126, 127, 128, 139, 365, 369. In most of the exhibits there was an indication as to whether the admission price given included or excluded taxes. When this information was given in the exhibits, it is stated in the table as "tax incl.", or "tax excl." The word "none" is used to mean that though a license was in evidence, no admission price was specifically stated in the contract, either through inadvertence or on the understanding that the admission prices currently being charged or contained in previous licenses would be continued. Record pp. 433, 724, 782, 1082, 1211. The symbol "x" is used to indicate that no license of that distributor for that particular theatre was in evidence.

It is apparent from the foregoing that there was great similarity and in many cases identity in the minimum prices fixed for the same theatre in the licenses of all the defendants. Where there was a marked difference in price, as for example in the admissions specified by RKO, Columbia and Universal, in a theatre in Charleston, South Carolina, it is likely to have been due to the showing of a picture of a different class from the others, or upon a different run.

Such uniformity of action spells a deliberately unlawful system, the existence of which is not dispelled by the testimony of interested witnesses that one distributor does not know what another distributor is doing; and there can, in our opinion, be no reasonable inference that the defendants are not all planning to fix minimum prices to which their licensees must adhere. See Record p. 1322.

In addition, several of the exhibits disclose operating agreements between the five distributor-defendants who are also theatre owners, or between them and independent theatre owners in which joint operation of the theatres covered by the agreements is provided and minimum admission prices to be charged are either stated therein, or are to be jointly determined by other means. Apparently those particular price-fixing agreements do not involve the three minor defendants or their subsidiaries. For example, in Plaintiff's Exh. 220 there are agreements between subsidiaries of Loew's and Warner, covering the period of May 5, 1938 to August 31, 1947, according to which the admission prices for three theatres in Pittsburgh—two of Warner and one of Loew's—are to be fixed by a joint committee. In Plaintiff's Exh. 218, an agreement between Warner and Paramount provides that from March 1, 1936, to August 31, 1953, two theatres previously operated by Warner, and one theatre previously operated by Paramount in Hammond, Indiana, should be managed by Warner Bros. Circuit Management Corporation and the then present scale of admission prices maintained. By other agreements in Plaintiff's Exh. 219, RKO and Warner provided for joint operation from August 27, 1937, to August 31, 1950, of five theatres in Cleveland—three of RKO and two of Warner—for which minimum prices are to be determined by a joint operating committee. See also, e. g., Plaintiff's Exh. 229 (Warner and independent); Exh. 213 (Loew's and independents); Exh. 202 (RKO and independent); Exhs. 226, 226a (Paramount, Warner, and independent); Exh. 223 (Warner and independent); Exh. 386 (Paramount, RKO and independent); Exhs. 238, 239 (Fox and independents); Exh. 387 (Paramount, RKO and independent); Exh. 206 (RKO and Paramount); Exh. 221 (Warner and Paramount); Exh. 209 (RKO and Paramount); Exh. 205 (Paramount and independent). These agreements show the express intent of the major defendants to maintain prices at artificial levels.

As further evidence of a conspiracy among the distributors to fix prices, we find master agreements and franchises between various of the defendants in their capacities as distributors and various of the defendants in their capacities as exhibitors. These contracts stipulate minimum admission prices often for dozens of theatres owned by an exhibitor-defendant in a particular area of the United States. Loew's as distributor, for example, fixed minimum prices for nearly all of Paramount's 133 theatres in Florida in an agreement covering the 1943-44 season. Plaintiff's Exh. 57 (11). In the Chicago area Loew's again as distributor specified prices in a single agreement for upwards of 50 theatres owned by a Paramount subsidiary, Balaban & Katz Corporation. Plaintiff's Exhs. 250, 173. United Artists as distributor also specified prices for the Balaban & Katz theatres owned by a Paramount subsidiary, Balaban & Katz 369 (6). Similarly, Loew's specified prices for the entire Warner circuit of theatres for the 1943-44 season, Plaintiff's Exh. 57 (8-10, 21-2, 30, 32, 35, 38, 48); for the same season United Artists specified prices for five RKO theatres in Cincinnati, Plaintiff's Exh. 274; Paramount for seven RKO theatres in Cincinnati, Plaintiff's Exh. 240; Loew's for the same seven RKO theatres in Cincinnati, Plaintiff's Exh. 248; Warner for forty or more RKO theatres in Greater New York, Plaintiff's Exh. 126; Loew's for six Fox theatres in Los Angeles County, Plaintiff's Exh. 249; Warner for subsequent run Paramount theatres in Detroit and Birmingham, Michigan, Plaintiff's Exh. 244.

A master agreement between United Artists as distributor and Fox as exhibitor for the season 1938-39 covered distribution of pictures of five independent producers in Fox theatre circuits in Los Angeles, San Francisco, Salt Lake City, St. Louis, Milwaukee, Omaha, Denver, and other cities, all on a percentage basis. It contained the following clause:

> "Where pictures are licensed on a percentage rental basis the scale of admission prices to be not less than the scale of admission prices charged to view pictures of comparable quality exhibited by the exhibitor and distributed by distributors other than United Artists."

The foregoing quotation shows an acquiescence of United Artists in admission prices fixed by any other distributor and an adherence to those prices in its own licenses. Plaintiff's Exh. 199.

A franchise agreement between Universal Corporation as distributor and Interstate Theatres, Inc., and Texas Consolidated Theatres, Inc., for the seasons 1941-44 is similar. Plaintiff's Exh. 261. In each of the two latter companies Paramount had a 50% interest. The franchise covered pictures distributed by Universal to the theatres of the two licensees and contained the ordinary provisions for penalties if minimum admission prices were not maintained. See note 2 supra. While no minimum prices were specified in the agreements it is not really questioned that in such circumstances the current prices were implied as part of the contract. See Record pp. 433, 724, 782, 1082, 1210-11.

There is also in evidence a franchise agreement between Columbia Pictures Corporation as distributor and Marcus Loew Booking Agency, a Loew's subsidiary, for the seasons 1944-46 covering pictures distributed to Loew's metropolitan New York Circuit. Plaintiff's Exh. 471. Minimum admission prices were not specified, but, as in other cases, were implied.

Licenses granted by one defendant to another for exhibition in only one theatre, while less striking evidence of conspiracy than the above master agreements and franchises, disclose the same inter-relationship among the defendants. Each of the five major defendants as a theatre-owning exhibitor has been licensed by the other seven defendants as distributors to exhibit the pictures of the latter at specified minimum prices. RKO, for example, as a theatre-owner, has been granted licenses with price restrictions by the other defendant-distributors. In turn, RKO, being itself a distributor, has granted similar licenses to the other four exhibiting defendants. We think that RKO, Loew's, Warner, Paramount and Fox, in granting and accepting licenses with minimum prices specified, have among themselves engaged in a national system to fix prices, and that Columbia, Universal and United Artists, in requiring the maintenance of minimum prices in their licenses granted to these exhibitor-defendants, have participated in that system.

It is a reasonable inference from all the foregoing that the distributor-defendants have acquiesced in the establishment of a price-fixing system and have conspired with one another to maintain prices. Such a conspiracy is per se a violation of the Sherman Act. Ethyl Gasoline Corp. v. United States, 309 U. S. 436; United States v. Frankfort Distilleries, Inc., 324 U. S. 293; United States v. Masonite Corp., 316 U. S. 265.

Moreover, irrespective of the conspiracy among distributors to which we have referred, each distributor-defendant has illegally combined with its licensees, for in agreeing to maintain a stipulated minimum admission price, each exhibitor thereby consents to the minimum price level at which it will compete against other licensees of the same distributor whether they exhibit on the same run or not. The total effect is that through the separate contracts between the distributor and its licensees a price structure is erected which regulates the licensees' ability to compete against one another in admission prices. Each licensee knows from the general uniformity of admission price practices that other licensees having theatres suitable for exhibition of a distributor's picture in the particular competitive area will also be restricted as to maintenance of minimum prices, and this acquiescence of the exhibitors in the distributor's control of price competition renders the whole a conspiracy between each distributor and its licensees. An effective system of price control in which the distributor and its licensees knowingly take part by entering into price-restricting contracts is thereby created. That the combination is made up of a sum of separate licensing contracts, individually executed, does not affect its illegality, for tacit participation in a general scheme to control prices is as violative of the Sherman Act as an explicit agreement. Interstate Circuit v. United States, 306 U. S. 208; United States v. Masonite Corp., 316 U. S. 265; Goldman Theatres, Inc. v. Loew's, Inc., 150 F. 2d 738 (C. C. A. 3).

This practice of stipulating minimum admission prices in the contracts of license is illegal in another respect. The differentials in price set by a distributor in licensing a particular picture in theatres exhibiting on different runs in the same competitive area are calculated to encourage as many patrons as possible to see the picture in the prior-run theatres where they will pay higher prices than in the subsequent runs. The reason for this is that if 10,000 people of a city's population are ultimately to see the picture—no matter on what run—the gross revenue to be realized from their patronage is increased relatively to the increase in numbers seeing it in the higher-priced prior-run theatres. In effect, the distributor, by the fixing of minimum prices, attempts to give the prior-run exhibitors as near a monopoly of the patronage as possible. This, we believe, to be in violation of § 2 of the Sherman Act, at least when the distributor's own theatres are not exhibiting its picture on a prior-run and it is to theatres other than its own that it attempts to give a monopoly.

It is argued that the practice of minimum admission price-fixing is permitted under the Copyrighted Act. But that act has never been held to sanction a conspiracy among licensors and licensees artificially to maintain prices. We do not question that the Coypright Act permits the owner of a copyrighted picture to exhibit it in its own theatres upon such terms as it sees fit, nor need we now decide whether a copyright owner may lawfully fix admission prices to be charged by a single independent exhibitor for the exhibition of its film, if other licensors and exhibitors are not in contemplation. Interstate Circuit v. United States, 306 U. S. 208; cf. United States v. General Electric Co., 272 U. S. 476. As other licensors and exhibitors are always in contemplation, so far as we can see, the question would appear academic.

This does not contravene the rule announced in United States v. General Electric Co., 272 U. S. 476, for there a license to only a single licensee—the Westinghouse Company—was involved, and, therefore, no conspiracy which sought to amplify the rights of the licensor under the Patent Act. The other question involved in that case was whether a patentee might lawfully require its bona fide agents to maintain minimum prices in selling the former's patented articles. The court held that it could. There is no claim here, however, that the exhibitors as licensees under the distributors' copyrights are agents in any sense, and we do not see that such a claim could be made. In any event, United States v. Masonite Corp., 316 U. S. 265, involved facts closely analogous to those here and affords ample basis for our decision.

Some argument has been made that the defendants' fixing of minimum admission prices is exempted from operation of the Sherman Act by the Miller-Tydings Amendment to that act, 50 Stat. 693 (1937), 15 U. S. C. A. § 1 (1940). The amendment pertains, however, only to "contracts or agreements prescribing minimum prices for the resale of a commodity", and the undisputed evidence is that the distributors merely grant licenses to the exhibitors for exhibition of their films and that title to none of their films at any time passes to the exhibitors. Furthermore, the distributor-defendants have engaged in a conspiracy, and the amendment explicitly states that despite its other provisions, contracts or agreements between "persons firms, or corporations in competition with each other" to establish or maintain minimum prices remain illegal. United States v. Frankfort Distilleries, Inc., 324 U. S. 293; United States v. Bausch & Lomb Co., 321 U. S. 707; United States v. Univis Lens Co., 316 U. S. 241.

The foregoing holding that the defendants have all engaged in unlawful price-fixing does not prevent the distributors from continuing their present methods of determining film rentals; they may measure their compensation by stated sums, by a given percentage of a particular theatre's receipts, by a combination of these two, or by any other appropriate means. What is held to be violative of the Sherman Act is not the distributors' devices for measuring rentals, but their fixing of minimum admission prices which automatically regulates the ability of one licensee to compete against another for the patron's dollar and tends to increase such prices as well as profits from exhibition.

If the exhibitors are not restrained by the distributors in the right to fix their own prices, there will be an opportunity for the exhibitors, whether they be affiliates or independents, to compete with one another. This is because one exhibitor by lowering admission prices will be able to compete with other exhibitors in obtaining patrons for his theatre—a competition which may well benefit both exhibitors and the public paying the admission fees.

Clearance and Run

Among provisions common to the licensing contracts of all the distributor defendants are those by which the licensor agrees not to exhibit or grant a license to exhibit a certain motion picture before a specified number of days after the last date of the exhibition therein licensed. This so-called period of "clearance" or "protection" is stated in the various licenses in differing ways: in terms of a given period between designated runs, as for example in the Chicago area, Plaintiff's Exh. 369, see Bigelow v. RKO Radio Pictures, Inc., 150 F. 2d 877 (C.C.A. 7), affirmed 326 U. S. (February 25, 1946), and as in Washington and New York, Plaintiff's Exhibits 244, 471; in terms of admission prices charged by competing theatres, as "20 days over 30¢ theatres, 28 days over 25¢ theatres," Plaintiff's Exhibits 57, 173, 178, 189; in terms of a given period of clearance over specifically named theatres, Plaintiff's Exhibits 94, 181, 242, 253, 259; in terms of so many days' clearance over specified areas or towns, Plaintiff's Exhibits 126, 175, 182, 182A, 183, 194, 244, 250, 255, 470, 476; in terms of clearances as fixed by other distributors, Plaintiff's Exhibits 188, 417; or in terms of combinations of these formulae.

It appears to be plaintiff's contention that clearance practices inherently operate to produce unreasonable restrictions of competition among theatres and are therefore per se violative of the Sherman Act. With this we do not agree, for it seems to us that a grant of clearance, when not accompanied by a fixing of minimum prices or not unduly extended as to area or duration, affords a fair protection to the interests of the licensee without unreasonably interfering with the interests of the public. At common law a vendor of income-producing property may validly covenant with his purchaser not to compete for a given time or within a given area so long as the restrictions are reasonably necessary to protect the value of the property purchased. Cincinnati, Portsmouth, Big Sandy and Pomeroy Packet Co. v. Bay, 200 U. S. 179; see Rogers v. Parry, 2 Cro. 326 (K. B. 1613); United States v. Addyston Pipe & Steel Co., 85 Fed. 271 (C. C. A. 6). It is true that licenses of property rather than sales are here concerned and that the distributors covenant not only not to exhibit the films themselves, but also not to license them to others. Nevertheless, we believe these are not differences which affect the applicability of the common-law rule to the present case, for licenses between one distributor and one exhibitor with reasonable clearance provisions do not, in our opinion, involve anything unlawful. Such provisions are no more than safeguards against concurrent or subsequent licenses in the same area until the exhibitor whose theatre is involved has had a chance to exhibit the pictures licensed without invasion by a subsequent exhibitor at a lower price. It seems nothing more than an adoption of the common law rule to restrict subsequent exhibitions for a reasonable time within a reasonable area. While clearance may indirectly affect admission prices, it does not fix them and is, we believe, a reasonable restraint permitted by the Sherman Act. Standard Oil Co. v. United States, 221 U. S. 1; United States v. American Tobacco Co., 221 U. S. 106; Westway Theatre, Inc. v. Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corp., 30 F. Supp. 830, affirmed on opinion below, 113 F. 2d 932 (C. C. A. 4); see United States v. Masonite Corp., 316 U. S. 265; Ethyl Gasoline Corp. v. United States, 309 U. S. 436.

The costs of each black and white print is from $150 to $300, and of a technicolor print is from $600 to $800. Many of the bookings are for less than the cost of the print so that exhibitions would be confined to the larger high-priced theatres unless a system of successive runs with a reasonable protection for the earlier runs is adopted in the way of clearance.

In Section VIII of the Consent Decree, moreover, there is the explicit statement to which all parties, including the plaintiff, consented

While, as previously stated, we do not deem ourselves bound by any provision of the consent decree, if we now find that it violates the Sherman Act, the forcefulness of the phrasing of this sentence indicates the proved utility of clearance practices in the movie industry and also their apparent necessity for a reasonable conduct of the business. Indeed, it is practically conceded that exhibitors would find extremely perilous the acceptance of licenses for the exhibition of films without assurance by the distributor that a nearby competitor would not be licensed to show the same film either at the same time or so soon thereafter that the exhibitor's expected income—perhaps on the basis of which he agreed to the specified rental—would be greatly diminished. Moreover, we understand the plaintiff to concede that the licensor may license its pictures for different successive dates. A reasonable clearance is in practical effect much the same. Either a license for successive dates, or one providing for clearance, permits the public to see the picture in a later-exhibiting theatre at lower than prior rates.

Several courts have previously considered the validity of clearances under the Sherman Act and have concluded that in the absence of an unconsciously long time or too extensive an area embraced by the clearance, or a conspiracy of distributors to fix clearances, there was nothing of itself illegal in their use. Westway Theatre, Inc. v. Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corp., 30 F. Supp. 830 (D. Md.), affirmed on opinion below, 113 F. 2d 932 (C. C. A. 4), and unreported cases therein cited; Gary Theatre Co. v. Columbia Pictures Corp., 120 F. 2d 891 (C. C. A. 7). We find the reasoning of these cases persuasive.

It is true that in some instances large theatre circuits by use of their great film-buying power have been able to negotiate successfully with the distributor-defendants for grants of unreasonable clearances or unjustified prior runs for their theatres. United States v. Crescent Amusement Co., 323 U. S. 173; Bigelow v. RKO Radio Pictures, Inc., 150 F. 2d 877 (C. C. A. 7), affirmed 326 U. S. (February 25, 1946); Goldman v. Loew's, 150 F. 2d 738 (C. C. A. 3); United States v. Schine Chain Theatres, Inc., 63 F. Supp. 229 (W. D. N. Y.). While we cannot find sufficient evidence to support an inference that the major defendants here, though controlling some of the largest circuits of theatres in the country and thus possessing potential weapons of great strength, have either collectively or severally entered upon a general policy of discriminating against independents in their grants of clearances, yet they have acquiesced in and forwarded a uniform system of clearances and in numerous instances have maintained unreasonable clearances to the prejudice of independents and perhaps even of affiliates. The decision of such controversies as may arise over clearances should be left to local suits in the area concerned, or, even more appropriately, to litigation before an Arbitration Board composed of men versed in the complexities of this industry.

In determining the reasonableness of the specific clearances which may come before these tribunals, they should consider whether the clearance has been set so as to favor affiliates or control the admission prices of the theatres involved. A distributor will naturally tend to grant a subsequent run to and clearance over a theatre for which the owner of his own volition sets a low admission price, for the distributor will be inclined to seek out the higher priced theatres first where the revenue is likely to be greater and consequently in case of licenses on a percentage basis where a percentage share will be higher. This, however, would seem the inevitable result of the competition for the distributor's films from theatres which are the larger or better equipped, and for which higher admission prices may therefore be charged by their operators. Such competition the lower priced theatres must be prepared to meet; or else be content with subsequent runs and grants of clearance over them. The temptations to the distributor to use clearance grants to force a theatre to raise its prices and thus to qualify for prior runs having less clearance over it, and more clearance over competitors are nevertheless obvious and the courts or arbitration board should guard that this is not done. Clearance should be granted on the basis of theatre conditions which the exhibitor creates, not the distributor. The line to be drawn is indeed indistinct, but its existence is no less real.

In determining whether any clearance complained of is unreasonable, the following factors should be taken into consideration and accorded the importance and weight to which each is entitled, regardless of the order in which they are listed:

(1) The admission prices, as set by the exhibitors, of the theatres involved;

(2) The character and location of the theatres involved, including size, type of entertainment, appointments, transit facilities, etc.;

(3) The policy of operation of the theatres involved, such as the showing of double features, gift nights, giveaways, premiums, cut-rate tickets, lotteries, etc.;

(4) The rental terms and license fees paid by the theatres involved and the revenues derived by the distributor-defendant from such theatres;

(5) The extent to which the theatres involved compete with each other for patronage;

(6) The fact that a theatre involved is affiliated with a defendant-distributor or with an independent circuit of theatres should be disregarded; and

(7) There should be no clearance between theatres not in substantial competition.

The foregoing has been directed to the validity of clearance provisions resulting from separate negotiations between individual distributors and exhibitors in free and open competition with other distributors and exhibitors, and, as stated, we believe their reasonable use to be lawful. It is here claimed by plaintiff, however, that the distributor-defendants have acted in concert in the formation of a uniform system of clearances for the theatres to which they license their films and that the exhibitor-defendants have assisted in creating and have acquiesced in this system. This we find to be the case and hold to be in violation of the Sherman Act.

The following testimony warrants the inference that the defendants, as we found to be the case in the fixing of admission prices, have acted in concert in their grants of run and clearance. William F. Rodgers, general sales manager and vice-president of Loew's, testified that the field managers determine whether a theatre shall be licensed to exhibit on a first or on a subsequent run, that the clearance of a given theatre is more or less historical, except for that of new theatres, and that there has been very little change in clearance over a period of years. Record pp. 542-3. Prior to 1943-44 Loew's license agreements provided that the clearance granted therein should apply to any theatre thereafter opened. Record p. 556.

Charles M. Reagan, vice-president of Paramount in charge of sales, stated that once clearance is agreed upon, it remains the same unless either exhibitor or distributor wants to change it. Record pp. 710-11. There is a difference between a distributor's and an exhibitor's interest in the period of clearance granted. The distributor wants to get the most possible in film rental from all the runs, the exhibitor to get as much clearance over a succeeding run as possible, because he has no interest in any succeeding run. The distributor, however, has a definite interest. Record p. 710. Clearances as granted apply to all pictures regardless of their quality. Record p. 715.

Martin J. Mullen, vice-president of M & P Theatres, a managing corporation which operates a group of New England theatres affiliated with Paramount, said that clearance is generally negotiated each time a license contract is made, but is actually carried along from year to year and generally understood when once established; that originally, before this time, clearance was established as a result of individual negotiations and followed along the same lines as they were with some changes. Record p. 968. All defendants grant the same clearance to the same theatre. Record p. 977.

John J. Friedl, president and general manager of the Minnesota Amusement Company, a wholly-owned subsidiary of Paramount, said that he generally got from the various distributors the same clearance for the particular theatre for which he is negotiating; that while clearance is negotiated with each license, it generally remains the same, and the same clearance is granted by distributor-defendants and non-defendants alike, Record p. 1003; that clearance is pretty well established, and it is definitely followed in all cases. Record p. 1013.

Morton J. Thalheimer, an independent theatre exhibitor in Richmond, Virginia, called as a witness by Fox, testified that clearance was in effect in Richmond when he first went into business, and it seemed perfectly normal and natural that it should remain that way; that it protects his first-run against his own sub-runs and against his competitor's sub-runs. Record p. 1384. To his knowledge, the system of clearances had existed in Richmond for over nineteen years, during which time there had not been any change. Record p. 1401.

Harold J. Fitzgerald, president of Fox Wisconsin Theatres, Inc., operating sixty-six motion picture theatres in Wisconsin and Michigan, a wholly owned subsidiary of the defendant National Theatres Corporation, testified by affidavit that the situation with respect to the licensing of films, and the runs and clearances involved, were much the same in 1928 as they are today, Record p. 1973; that licensing arrangements were vital to distributor and exhibitor and that clearance obviously had a definite effect upon the capacity of his corporation to secure patronage at its top admission price. If Fox Wisconsin undertook to pay a distributor the film rental based upon a high percentage of gross, it would be interested in clearance over any neighborhood theatre which the distributor might license on a competing subsequent run. Generally negotiations as to clearance do not take place with respect to each block of pictures licensed because once a fair and reasonable clearance has been determined by the distributor and exhibitor it tends to become fixed, and ordinarily will be the same in a series of contracts in the absence of any unchanged circumstances and conditions. Record p. 1983.

Benjamin Kalmenson, sales manager of Warner Bros. Distributors Corporation, testified that clearances have been pretty well set through the country for a great many years, and are "acquiesced in by exhibitors, producers, independents, affiliates and everybody, until there has grown up a kind of system of clearance." Record p. 1506.

Robert Mochrie, general sales manager of RKO Radio Pictures, Inc., stated upon his examination that RKO in determining the length of clearance between theatres, takes into consideration the amount of clearance which in its opinion will yield it the largest revenue, taking all theatres into account as a whole and subject to a clearance condition that has built itself up in the city over a period of time. In negotiating licenses, there is frequent occasion to give consideration to the existing clearance between theatres, but they do not consider it anew each time because the factors which determined it originally at some past time remain stable from year to year. He said there are no general or frequent instances in his practice of clearances different in some particular city, from those granted by a co-defendant. He usually knows what clearances other distributors are granting. His customer usually tells him what clearance he wants, which is what he is getting from other distributors. He has no agreements with other distributors that he will adopt the same clearance, and his explanation as to why in some instances the clearances granted by RKO to a prior run theatre is the same as a clearance granted by one or more other distributors serving the same theatre is that clearance has been the outgrowth in time between those two theatres, and the exhibitor buys such products on such a clearance basis and offers the witness the same. Record pp.1714-15.

Abraham Montague, general sales manager of Columbia, testified that in negotiating deals, the "clearance is something we usually find when we arrive there, and we usually negotiate our deal within the clearance we find"; that it would be impracticable and impossible to set up new clearance. Record p. 1268. His company keeps a record of clearances in the community. Record p. 1347. Where his company grants clearance to one theatre over another, it usually follows the pattern set by clearance that is given by other major distributors as well as those which are not majors. He usually does not make any independent determination of whether the clearance is reasonable or unreasonable. He takes it as he finds it, and finding it in most cases standardized, his company does not feel that it is strong enough to change it. Record pp. 1376-7.

Paul N. Lazarus, manager of the contract department of United Artists, testified that clearances are "generally understood, and they follow along their established custom." Record p. 1440. For testimony of other witnesses to the same effect as the foregoing, see Record pp. 2012, 2043, 2049, 2086, 2110-11.

The fixed character of clearances and the uniformity of the distributor-defendants' practice with reference thereto are shown by the exhibits, as well as the testimony. Many of the franchises, master agreements, and so-called "formula deals" which are in evidence provide that clearances shall be the same as those in effect on the date of the agreement. See Plaintiff's Exhibits 419A (RKO and independent); 419B (RKO and Paramount); 241 (Paramount and Fox); 172 (Paramount and Loew's); 473 (RKO and Universal); 245 (Warner and Fox); 251 (Fox and Paramount); 254 (Fox and RKO). Some of the agreements establish clearances for more than a season. See Plaintiff's Exhibits 181 (3 years, Loew's and Warner); 187 (3 years, Loew's and Fox); 249 (9 years, Loew's and Fox); 259 (3 years, Warner and Universal). Others provide that the clearance is to be no less favorable to the exhibitor than that which had been granted by the distributor for the previous season or in the preceding agreement. See Plaintiff's Exhibits 265, 472 (Columbia and Fox); 190 (RKO and Fox); 199, 272A, 383 (United Artists and Fox).

In some of the agreements, the clearance therein stated was also to be granted to all theatres which the exhibitor-party to the contract might thereafter own, lease, control, manage, or operate. See Plaintiff's Exhibits 172 (Paramount and Loew's); 266, 266A (Columbia and Warner); 471 (Columbia and Loew's); 192 (Fox and Warner). Moreover, the license forms for 1936-7 of Paramount, Fox,

Loew's, Warner, RKO, Columbia and Universal, and for 1943-44 of Paramount, Warner, Columbia and Universal, each contain a provision identical or similar to the following:

> "If clearance is granted against a named theatre or theatres indicating that it is the intention of the Distributor to grant such clearance against all theatres in the immediate vicinity of the Exhibitor's theatres then unless otherwise provided in the schedule, such clearance shall include any theatre in such vicinity thereafter erected or opened." See Plaintiff's Exhibits 275, 277, 279-81, 283-6, 289-90.

It is clear that the purpose of these two types of clearance agreements was to fix the run and clearance status of any theatre thereafter opened, not on the basis of its appointments, size, location, and other competitive factors normally entering into such a determination, but rather upon the sole basis of whether it were operated by the exhibitor-party to the agreement.

Much that has been said about clearances is applicable also to runs; the two are practically alike. Clearances are given to protect a particular run against a subsequent run, and the practice of clearance is so closely allied with that of run as to make comment on the one applicable to the other.

Rodgers, of Loew's testified that a run usually remains static for a given theatre, Record p. 421, and he determines what runs shall be "offered" to an exhibitor. Record p. 418. The size of the theatre does not necessarily determine whether it is satisfactory for operation on a first run. Record p. 566.

Reagan, of Paramount, said that negotiations with an exhibitor are "usually conducted on the basis of a particular run." In the case of a new theatre, the distributor usually considers whether it wants to do business on the run the theatre would like.[7] In the New York area, second runs are sold by him only to Loew's and RKO. Record pp. 815-16.

The evidence we have referred to shows that both independent distributors and exhibitors when attempting to bargain with the defendants have been met by a fixed scale of clearances, runs, and admission prices to which they have been obliged to conform if they wished to get their pictures shown upon satisfactory runs or were to compete in exhibition either with the defendants' theatres or with theatres to which the latter have licensed their pictures. Under the circumstances disclosed in the record there has been no fair chance for either the present or any future licensees to change a situation sanctioned by such effective control and general acquiescence as have obtained. See Bigelow v. RKO Radio Pictures, Inc., 150 F. 2d 877 (C.C.A. 7), affirmed 326 U. S. — (February 25, 1946); Goldman v. Loew's, Inc., 150 F. 2d 738 (C.C.A. 3); Youngclaus v. Omaha Film Board of Trade, 60 F. 2d 538 (D.C. Neb.). The only way competition may be introduced into the present system of fixed prices, clearances, and runs is to require a defendant when licensing its pictures to other exhibitors to make each picture available at a minimum fixed or percentage rental and (if clearance is desired) to grant a reasonable clearance and run. When so offered, the licensor shall grant the license for the desired run to the highest bidder if such bidder is responsible and has a theatre of a size, location, and equipment to present the picture to advantage. In other words, if two theatres are bidding and are fairly comparable the one offering the best terms shall receive the license. Thus price fixing among the licensors or between a licensor and its licensees as well as the non-competitive clearance system may be terminated, and the requirements of the Sherman Act, which the present system violates, will be adequately met. The administrative details involved in such changes will require further consideration. We are satisfied that existing arrangements are in derogation of the rights of independent distributors, exhibitors, and the public, and that the proposed changes will tend to benefit them all.

Formula Deals, Master Agreements, and Franchises

Formula deals, certain master agreements, and franchises have tendered to restrain trade in the distribution and exhibition of motion picture features and in view of the history and relation to the moving picture business of the various parties to this action have exercised unreasonable restraints. In our opinion these restraints will be obviated or at least sufficiently mitigated by requiring a distributor wishing its pictures to be shown outside of its own theatres to offer to license each picture to all theatres desiring to show it on a particular run and, if the theatres are responsibly owned and otherwise adequate, to grant the desired run to the highest bidder.

Formula deals have been entered into by Paramount and by RKO with independent and affiliated circuits. By such agreements a particular circuit has been licensed to exhibit a certain feature in all its theatres at a specified percentage of the national gross receipts realized from that feature by all theatres in the United States. The circuit may allocate playing time and film rentals among the various theatres as it sees fit. See Plaintiff's Exhibits 241, 419A, 419B. Arrangements whereby all the theatres of a circuit are included in a single agreement, and no opportunity is afforded for other theatre owners to bid for the picture in their several areas, seriously and as we hold unreasonably restrain competition. These formula deals have been negotiated without, so far as we are informed, any competition on the part of independent theatre owners who would labor under a great disadvantage in attempting severally to match or outbid the offers of a circuit that was making offers for all of its theatres.

Certain master agreements are open to the same objection as formula deals, for they cover exhibition in two or more theatres in a particular circuit and allow the exhibitor to allocate the film rental paid among the theatres as it sees fit and also to exhibit the features upon such playing time as it deems best, and leaves other terms to the circuit's discretion. See, e.g., Plaintiff's Exhibits 196, 251, 267, 270, 270A, 273, 476. These are different from some other master agreements in which there are separate provisions covering the licensing of the picture for each particular theatre. See, e.g., Plaintiff's Exhibits 182, 182A, 189, 190, 191, 248. These later agreements in effect only combine in one document a number of theatres with proper licenses for each. This may be done if there is an opportunity for exhibitors to bid for the same runs at an offered price.

Franchises which so far as the five major defendants are concerned were forbidden by the consent decree are also objectionable because they cover too long periods (more than one season) and also because they embrace all the pictures released by a given distributor. They necessarily contravene the plan of licensing each picture, theatre by theatre, to the highest bidder.

It is true that a prohibition of formula deals, master agreements and franchises will interfere with certain contracts which have been made in the past but their formation was a restraint upon trade which was unlawful at the time they were made, and therefore should not be continued. We see no reason to hold that the failure to bring in to this suit one of the contracting parties prevents the issue of an injunction forbidding one who is a party to the suit from continuing to cary out an arrangement which causes unlawful restraints. While our decision will not be res judicata as to those not parties to the litigation, the parties are necessarily and properly bound, and indeed the decision is a judicial precedent against the others on the questions of law involved in those situations we have referred to where they have unreasonably restrained trade and commerce.

In our opinion it follows from the foregoing that provisions in license agreements known as moveovers which give to a licensee the privilege of exhibiting a given picture in a second theatre as a continuation of a run in a first theatre are incompatible with the system we have prescribed of bidding for pictures and runs theatre by theatre. The same would seem to be true of so-called overage-and-underage provisions which are often inserted in licenses to permit an exhibitor owning a number of theatres to apply a deficit in the playing time in one or more others. Under such provisions it is not possible to determine the amount payable for the account of one theatre until the performances in the others have been completed, or practically to apply the bidding system we are establishing. But provisions in licenses for "extended" or "repeat" runs in the same theatre, though apparently criticized by the government, would not seem to be objectionable if reasonably limited in time when other exhibitors are given the opportunity to bid for similar licenses. Likewise, any other license provisions which may be called to our attention that would substantially interfere with the effectiveness of the bidding system would have to be revised and perhaps may have to be specially dealt with in the decree to follow this opinion.

Block-booking and Blind-selling

For many years the distributor-defendants licensed their films in "blocks," or indivisible groups, before they had been actually produced. In such cases the only knowledge prospective exhibitors had of the films which they had contracted for was from a description of each picture by title, plot and players. In many cases licenses for all the films had to be accepted in order to obtain any, though sometimes the exhibitor was given a right of subsequent cancellation for a certain number of pictures. Because of complaints of block-booking and blind-selling based upon the supposed unfairness of contracts which often included pictures—the inferior quality of which could not be known—Sections III and IV of the consent decree required the five consenting distributors to trade-show their films before offering them for license and limited the number which might be included in any contract to five. More than one block of five however could be licensed where the contents of any had been trade-shown. While this restriction in the consent decree has now ceased by time limitation, the consent distributors have continued to observe the restriction. The non-assenting distributors have retained up to the present time their previous methods of licensing in blocks, but have allowed their customers considerable freedom to cancel the license as to a percentage of the pictures contracted for.

The plaintiff argues that the Sherman Act forbids block-booking in toto. This is said to be because it is illegal to condition the licensing of one film upon the acceptance of another, and it therefore can make no difference whether the group of films involved in a license be two or forty. In our opinion this contention is sound, and any form of block-booking is illegal by which an exhibitor, in order to obtain a license for one or more films, must accept a license for one or more other films.

A patentee who has granted a license in consideration that the patented invention shall be used by the licensee only with unpatented material furnished by the licensor may not restrain as a contributory infringer one who sells to the licensee like materials for like use. Mercoid Corp. v. Mid-Continent Investment Co., 320 U. S. 661; Mercoid Corp. v. Minneapolis-Honeywell Regulator Co., 320 U. S. 680; Morton Salt Co. v. G. S. Suppiger, 314 U. S. 488, 491; Motion Picture Patents Co. v. Universal Film Mfg. Co., 243 U. S. 502; Carbice Corp. v. American Patents Corp., 283 U. S. 27; Leitch Mfg. Co. v. Barber Co., 302 U. S. 458. Moreover, as was said in Mercoid Corp. v. Mid-Continent Co., 320 U. S. 661, 670, a decree for an injunction against a contributory infringer would sanction both "a misuse of the patent privilege and a violation of the anti-trust laws." The same rule would appear to apply to copyrights and prevent a suit for contributory infringement by a copyright owner who had licensed the printing of his book, only in connection with paper supplied by him, against a third party supplying paper to the licensee in violation of the agreement. See Interstate Circuit Inc. v. United States, 306 U. S. 208; United States v. Crescent Amusement Co., 323 U. S. 173; Straus v. Am. Publisher's Ass'n, 231 U. S. 222.

It is true that a copyrighted motion picture when united with another copyrighted picture by block-booking is not tied to an uncopyrighted article. Nevertheless the objections to conditioning the licensing of one picture upon the licensing of another are the same, for the result is to give the copyright owner not only the reward which is his due from the licensing of a single copyrighted film, but to extend his monopoly by requiring his licensee to accept one or more other films and to pay royalties therefor as an additional consideration. We cannot see that this differs in principle from requiring the licensee to purchase uncopyrighted articles in connection with the license of a copyright. In either case the copyright owner is obtaining something which the decisions have forbidden as beyond the grant of his limited monopoly. Justice Holmes in his dissenting opinion in Motion Picture Patents Co. v. Universal Film Mfg. Co., 243 U. S. 502, 519, argued persuasively that the right of the owner of a patent to keep his device out of use included the right to condition its use. Such a doctrine would contravene the rule we are laying down, but his views were rejected by the majority of the Supreme Court in that decision, as well as in Straus v. Victor Talking Machine Co., 243 U. S. 490, and have proved to be contrary to a long line of subsequent decisions of that court—indeed to have been supplanted by the general trend of authority ever since the days of Henry v. Dick, 224 U. S. 1.

It may be argued that the common law gives a right to condition the licensing of one film upon the acceptance of another—that it is as though the owner of ordinary chattels refused to sell a lot to A unless the latter would purchase in a larger quantity than he desired. The question whether such a contract involving patents or copyrights was good at common law was apparently left open in Motion Picture Patents Co. v. Universal Film Mfg. Co., 243 U. S. 503, and Keeler v. Standard Folding Bed Co., 157 U. S. 659, and in Federal Trade Commission v. Paramount Famous-Lasky Corp., 57 F. 2d 152, the Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit sustained contracts of block-booking.

Block-booking, when the license of any film is conditioned upon taking of other films, is a system which prevents competitors from bidding for single pictures on their individual merits and adds to the monopoly of a single copyrighted picture that of another copyrighted picture which must be taken and exhibited in order to secure the first. It differs from such a sale of chattels as we have mentioned because it extends a monopoly which the owner of the chattels is not assumed to have. We are not inclined to follow Federal Trade Commission v. Paramount Famous-Lasky Corp., 57 F. 2d 152 (C.C.A. 2), for the reason we have given and particularly because of recent decisions of the Supreme Court. As Stone, C.J., said in Ethyl Gasoline Corp. v. United States, 309 U. S. 436, 459,—When dealing with the use of one patent to exploit another:

> "• • • It [Ethyl Gasoline Corporation] has chosen to exploit its patents by manufacturing the fluid covered by them and by selling that fluid to refiners for use in the manufacture of motor fuel. Such benefits as result from control over the marketing of the treated fuel by the jobbers accrue primarily to the refiners and indirectly to appellant, only in the enjoyment of its monopoly of the fluid secured under another patent. The licensing conditions are thus not used as a means of stimulating the commercial development and financial returns of the patented invention which is licensed, but for the commercial development of the business of the refiners and the exploitation of a second patent monopoly not embraced in the first. The patent monopoly of one invention may no more be enlarged for the exploitation of a monopoly of another, see Standard Sanitary Mfg. Co. v. United States, supra, than for the exploitation of an unpatented article, United Shoe Machinery Co. v. United States, supra; Carbice Corporation v. American Patents Corp., supra; Leitch Manufacturing Co. v. Barber Co., supra; American Lecithin Co. v. Warfield Co., 105 F. 2d 207, or for the exploitation or promotion of a business not embraced within the patent. Interstate Circuit v. United States, supra, 228-230."

See also United States v. Crescent Amusement Co., 323 U. S. 173; Hartford-Empire Co. v. United States, 323 U. S. 386, 415, 452-3; Mercoid Corp. v. Mid-Continent Investment Co., 320 U. S. 661, 670; Mercoid Corp. v. Minneapolis Honeywell Regulator Co., 320 U. S. 680, 684; United States v. Masonite Corp., 316 U. S. 265, 277-8; Interstate Circuit, Inc. v. United States, 306 U. S. 208, 227-230; Stokes & Smith Co. v. Transparent-Wrap Machine Corp., decided by Second Circuit Court of Appeals May 1, 1946.

We however declare illegal only that aspect of block-booking which makes the licensing of one copyright conditional upon an agreement to accept a license of one or more other copyrights. A distributor may license to an exhibitor at one time as many films as the latter wishes to receive, but the distributor may not constitute groups of pictures which it refuses to license separately. The distributor may of course not license his pictures at all, but if he does license them, he must do so severally and, in accordance with the bidding procedure previously indicated, must license them to the exhibitor or exhibitors who are qualified and offer the best terms for the various runs.

Blind-selling does not appear to be as inherently restrictive of competition as block-booking, although it is capable of some abuse. By this practice a distributor could promise a picture of good quality or of a certain type which when produced might prove to be of poor quality or of another type—a competing distributor meanwhile being unable to market its product and in the end losing its outlets for future pictures. The evidence indicates that trade-shows, which are designed to prevent such blind-selling, are poorly attended by exhibitors. Record pp. 1178-9. Accordingly, exhibitors who choose to obtain their films for exhibition in quantities, need to be protected against burdensome agreements by being given an option to reject a certain percentage of their blind-licensed pictures within a reasonable time after they shall have become available for inspection. Such right of rejection has been incorporated in numerous licenses given by the defendants and should be afforded whenever licenses of unproduced films and films not trade-shown are secured by an exhibitor who has made the best competitive bid for them.

The only group licensing we are prepared to sanction is licensing by which the group is not offered on condition that the licensee shall take all the pictures included in it, or none, but in which the pictures are separately priced, and each picture is to be sold to the highest duly qualified bidder. As we have already indicated in discussing formula deals, master agreements, and franchises, the offering of pictures should be theatre by theatre, and if more than one picture is included in a license agreement, it will be only because of business convenience and to the extent that each picture so included has received the best bid.

"Pooling" Agreements

It is claimed by plaintiff that the theatre-owning defendants have combined with each other and with independent theatre-owners by "pooling" their theatres through operating agreements, leases, joint stock ownership of theatre-operating corporations, or through joint ownership of theatres in fee. We are asked to determine the validity of these various means of joining interests.

By far the most numerous type of agreement in evidence is that by which given theatres of two or more exhibitors, normally in competition with each other, are operated as a unit or most of their business policies collectively determined by a joint committee, or by one of the exhibitors, and by which profits of the "pooled" theatres are divided among the owners according to pre-agreed percentages. See, e.g., Plaintiff's Exhibits 9, 100, 200, 206, 213, 220-1, 223, 226, 226A, 232. Some of the agreements provide that the parties thereto may not acquire other theatres in the competitive vicinity without first offering them for inclusion in the "pool." See, e.g., Plaintiff's Exhibits 201, 205-6, 219.

These operating agreements we hold to be in clear conflict with the Sherman Act, for through them a defendant-exhibitor reduces to a minimum opposition between its own and other theatres in the "pool". Cooperation, rather than competition, characterizes their operation, and in view of the exhibitor-defendants' financial strength, control of first-class film distribution, ownership of concentrated numbers of first-run theatres, and especially their combination to reduce competition in exhibition through systems of price-fixing and clearances, such restraints as these agreements impose upon free commerce in motion pictures are far less than reasonable. The result is to eliminate competition pro tanto both in exhibition and in distribution of films which would flow almost automatically to the theatres in the earnings of which they have a joint interest.

Other forms of operating agreements are between major defendants and independent exhibitors rather than between major defendants, see, e.g., Plaintiff's Exhibits 97, 118, 208, 238-9, 358, but we are not of the opinion that this renders them legal. The effect is to ally two or more theatres of different ownership into a coalition for the nullification of competition between them and for their more effective competition against theatres not members of the "pool". Even if the parties to such combinations were not major film producers and distributors, but were all wholly independent exhibitors, such agreements might often be regarded as beyond the reasonable limits of restraint allowance under the Sherman Act. This result is certain when some of the parties are of major stature in the movie industry and have in other ways imposed unlawful restraints upon it, as we have found to be the case upon the record before us.

In certain other cases the operating agreements are accomplished by leases of theatres, the rentals being determind by a stipulated percentage of profits earned by the "pooled" theatres, see, e.g., Plaintiff's Exhibits 9, 106, 118, 204. This appears to be but another means of carrying out the illegal objection discussed above. While a theatre-owner may of course remove itself from the business of operating theatres by leasing them to anyone it deems fit upon a fixed rental basis, so long as a monopoly in exhibition is not thereby achieved by the lessee, any arrangement whereby one of the exhibitor-defendants in this case allies its theatres with those of a competing exhibitor, independent or affiliated, and yet itself remains in the trade of exhibiting motion pictures by retaining an interest in the profits earned by the allied theatres, is unlawful under the anti-trust acts.

Many theatres, or the corporations owning them, are held jointly by one or more of the exhibitor-defendants, in some cases in conjunction with independents. See, e.g., Plaintiff's Exhibits 8, 9, 46, 48, 62, 164, 355, 387; RKO's Exhibit 11. As these joint interests enable the major defendants to operate theatres collectively, rather than competitively, we find them illegal for the reasons above stated. Approximate steps should be taken so that no exhibitor-defendant will own theatres (whether represented by fee, beneficial, or stock interests) jointly with other exhibitor-defendants, regardless of the size of interests involved. Appropriate steps should also be taken so that no exhibitor-defendant or defendants will jointly own a theatre or stock interest therein with any independent exhibitor, except when a defendant or an independent owns an interest of five per cent or less, which we deem de minimis and only to be treated as an inconsequential investment in exhibition. See infra p. 71. This result may be reached in situations like Florida, Texas, Minnesota and Michigan by a sale, purchase, or exchange of interests in jointly-owned theatres so long as the transaction sought to be achieved will not result in an unreasonable restraint of competition in exhibition within the particular competitive area. To this end the court will control the manner in which rearrangements of these joint interests are effected.

It seems impracticable to do more than lay down general rules as to the foregoing situations. If further details are required to cover specific provisions of the various pooling agreements, they should be set forth in the decree to be hereafter entered.

It should be added that in our opinion there can be no objection to operating, booking, or film buying through agents, provided the agent is not also acting in respect to theatres owned by other exhibitors, independent or affiliated, and provided that in case the agent is buying films for its principal he does this through the bidding system, theatre by theatre.

Discrimination Among Licensees

The amended and supplemental complaint alleges that in licensing films each of the distributor- defendants has discriminated against small independent exhibitors and in favor of the large affiliated and unaffiliated circuits. Of the various contract provisions by which such discriminations are said to have been accomplished, plaintiff sets forth the following in its brief: suspending the terms of a given contract, if a circuit theatre remains closed for more than eight weeks, and reinstating it without liability upon reopening. Plaintiff's Exhibits 188, 265-6, 383-4, 472-3; allowing large privileges in the selection and elimination of films. Plaintiff's Exhibits 172, 177, 192, 263-6, 383-4, 472; allowing deductions in film rentals if double bills are played, Plaintiff's Exhibits 183-4, 190, 199, 242, 245, 247, 258-9, 262, 264-6, 271-2a, 274, 382-3, 473; granting moveovers and extended runs, Plaintiff's Exhibits 182-2a, 199, 260, 262, 265, 267, 274, 383-4, 474, 476; granting roadshow privileges, Plaintiff's Exhibits 187-8, 199, 232, 265-6, 383-4, 472; allowing overage and undertage, Plaintiff's Exhibits, 190-1, 194, 259, 265-6, 383; granting unlimited playing time, Plaintiff's Exhibits 241, 267, 269, 471; excluding foreign pictures and those of independent producers, Plaintiff's Exhibits 173-4, 181, 190-1, 194, 199, 262, 265-6, 272a, 383-4, 395, 470-2; granting rights to question the classification of features for rental purposes, Plaintiff's Exhibits 187, 232, 259, 265, 472-3; and especially, discriminating in film rentals, clearances, and minimum admission prices, see Plaintiff's Brief pp. 56-70, 75-85.

These provisions are found most frequently in franchises and master agreements, which are made with the larger circuits of affiliated and unaffiliated theatres. Record pp. 1432-3; Columbia's Exhibit 9a; Universal's Exhibit 2; Plaintiff's Exhibits 195, 198, 259, 261, 265-6a, 384, 396, 470-3. Small independents are usually licensed, however, upon the standard forms of contract, which do not include them. Record pp. 1432-3; Plaintiff's Exhibits 275-90. The competitive advantages of these provisions are so great that their inclusion in contracts with the larger circuits constitutes an unreasonable discrimination against small competitors in violation of the anti-trust laws. It seems unnecessary to decide whether the record before us justifies a reasonable inference that the distributor-defendants have conspired among themselves to discriminate among their licensees, for each discriminating contract constitutes a conspiracy between the licensee and licensor. Interstate Circuit Inc. v. United States, 306 U. S. 208; United States v. Crescent Amusement Co., 323 U. S. 173.

The defendants argue that these privileges granted to the circuits flow from their negotiations with the individual theatre-owners rather than from a standard policy of discrimination deliberately pursued by them. This is perhaps true, but the result is the same whether the bargaining power of the large exhibitors forces upon the distributors a discriminatory policy, or whether the latter voluntarily carry such a policy into effect. Acquiescence in an unreasonable restraint, as well as the creation of such a restraint, violates the Sherman Act. Under the bidding system we are requiring such discriminations would appear impossible. Those provisions which are not compatible with the operation of this system, or which are inherently unreasonable, such as a provision for clearance between theatres where there is no substantial competition, will no longer be includible in licenses, as mentioned elsewhere, but otherwise the bidders will compete for licensing contracts on a parity, in that the same offer will be made to all prospective exhibitors in a community.

The foregoing is not to be construed, however, as indicating that the distributor-defendants have discriminated among their licensees with respect to film rentals, clearances, or minimum admission prices. They have perhaps done so, but we are without sufficient knowledge of the many factors entering into the determination of these provisions such as the character of specific communities, the nature of the different theatre appointments, of the patrons, operating policies, locations, and responsibility of operators. In the absence of such facts, we are unable to infer that the distributor-defendants have violated the Sherman Act in this particular regard, but any discriminations in the other ways noted above in favor of affiliated licensee of licensees connected with independent circuits as against individual independents must be enjoined, and we believe will not exist in future licenses under the bidding system for which we are providing.

order that no distributor of motion pictures shall be an exhibitor. Undoubtedly such a step while not ipso facto preventing price-fixing agreements or unreasonable clearance would terminate the government's most urgent objections to the present methods of conducting the motion picture business, but it would also withdraw the defendant-distributors from competition in the exhibition field and at the same time would create a new set of theatre owners which would be quite unlikely for some years to give the public as good service as the exhibitors they would have supplanted in view of the latter's demonstrated experience and skill in operating what must be regarded as in general the largest and best equipped theatres. We think that the opportunity of independents to compete under the bidding system for pictures and runs renders such a harsh remedy as complete divestiture unneccessary, at least until the efficiency of that system has been tried and found wanting.

In the year 1945 there were about 18,076 motion picture theatres in the United States of which the five major defendants had interests in 3,137 or 17.35 percent. Of the latter, Paramount or its subsidiaries owned independently of the other defendants 1395—a little less than half, or about 7.72 per cent; Warner 501, or about 2.77 per cent; Loew's 135, or about .74 per cent; Fox 636, or about 3.52 per cent, and RKO 109, or about .60 per cent. There were 361 theatres, or about 2.00 per cent, in which two or more of these defendants had joint interests, whether held directly or indirectly through stock ownership in the same corporation or through a lease or operating agreement. This tabulation excludes theatres connected with one or more of the defendants through film-buying or management contracts or through corporations in which a defendant owns an indirect minority stock interest. It includes all theatres in which each defendant otherwise owns a direct or indirect interest of any amount. See Loew's Exhibit 2; RKO's Exhibit 11; Plaintiff's Exhibits 8, 9, 12-3, 22, 47-8, 64, 87-8, 97, 100, 118-20, 156-64, 360.

cly of the motion picture business that they should be subjected to the drastic remedy of complete divestiture in order to affect a proper degree of free competition. It is only in certain localities and not in general that an ownership even of first-run theatres approximating monopoly exists. Under the proposed system the only theatres the competition of which in exhibition even Paramount—the largest owner—would in anywise control are the 7.72 per cent which it now owns. Each of the other four major defendants would control a far smaller percentage of the theatres. Even in places like Philadelphia and Cincinnati, where Warner and RKO have owned all the first-run theatres, their theatre interest cannot properly be aggregated to establish a conspiracy in restraining exhibition, for in such localities there would seem to be nothing to prevent other persons from building theatres of a similar type if the market for the distribution of films should be opened to the highest bidder and the builder of a new theatre could compete with the other theatre owners in obtaining pictures for exhibition in the theatre he had built. The only pictures that the present sole exhibitors in such localities could control would be their own, which they can always exhibit freely in their own theatres.

In about 60 per cent of the 92 cities having populations of over 100,000 on which the government mainly relies to prove its case, there are independent first-run theatres in competition with those of the major defendants except so far as it may be restricted by the trade practices we have criticized.[8] In about 91 per cent of these cities there is competition in first runs between independents and some of the major defendants or among the major defendants themselves, except so far as it may be restricted by the above trade practices.[9] If the bidding system we propose to set up, minimum admission prices in licenses eliminated, and the other restrictive agreements which we have discussed terminated, it is our opinion that adequate competition would exist. Indeed in all of the 92 cities, even where there is no present competition in first runs there is always competition in some run.

Moreover, there is no substantial proof that any of the corporate defendants was organized or has been maintained for the purpose of achieving a national monopoly, as was the case in Standard Oil Co. v. United States, 221 U. S. 1; United States v. American Tobacco Co., 221 U. S. 106, and United States v. Aluminum Co. of America, 148 F. 2d 416 (C. C. A. 2). The five major defendants cannot be treated collectively so as to establish claims of general monopolization in exhibition. They can only be restrained from the unlawful practices in fixing minimum prices, obtaining unreasonable clearances, block-booking, and other things we have criticized.

If in certain localities there is ownership by a single defendant of all the first-run theatres, there is no sufficient proof that it has been for the purpose of creating a monopoly and has not rather arisen from the inertness of competitors, their lack of finacial ability to build theatres comparable to those of the defendants, or from the preference of the public for the best equipped houses and not from "inherent vice" on the part of these defendants. Each defendant had a right to build and to own theatres and to exhibit pictures in them, and it takes greater proof than that each of them possessed great financial strength, many theatres, and exhibited the greater number of first-runs to deprive it of the ordinary rights of ownership. Outside the limits of the trade practices and agreements which we have found to violate the anti-trust laws and which will under the final decree be abolished, there is general competition among all the defendants as well as between them and independent distributors for the exhibition of their various pictures. Record p. 1962.

> "If there is only one store in a town at which every one trades, that fact does not itself constitute a monopoly in the legal sense. It is only when the merchant maintains his position by devices which compel everyone to trade with him exclusively that the situation becomes legally objectionable."

In the case at bar, as we have reiterated, many of the objections are to the trade practices we have alluded to, and not to the ownership of theatres either by the major defendants or by their wholly-owned subsidiaries. If those theatres were all owned by entirely independent corporations the distributing-producing defendants, if not in competition in the distribution of their films, would control competition in the exhibition business by in the aggregate controlling the distribution of most of the best pictures in the United States and imposing restrictions upon their use. The root of the difficulties we have discovered lies not in the ownership of many or most of the best theatres by the producer-distributors, but in price-fixing, non-competitive granting of runs and clearances, unreasonable clearances, formula deals, master agreements, franchises, block-booking, pooling agreements and certain discriminations among licensees between defendants and independents. These practices, if employed in the future, in favor of powerful independents would effect all of the undesirable results that have existed when the five major defendants and their subsidiaries have owned or controlled numerous theatres in which the defendants' pictures have been exhibited. That such would be the case seems amply demonstrated by the decisions where powerful independent circuits were involved. United States v. Crescent Amusement Co., 323 U. S. 173; Interstate Circuit Inc. v. United States, 306 U. S. 208. If the objectionable trade practices were eliminated, the only difference between such an assumed situation in which the defendants owned no theatres and the present would be the inability of the major defendants to play their own pictures in their own theatres. The precentage of pictures on the market which any of the five major defendants could play in its own theatres would be relatively small and in nowise approximates a monopoly of film exhibition.[10]

There has however been restraint of competition in exhibition by the five major defendants through ownership of theatres jointly with one another or if their interests be more than five per cent even where jointly held with independents which, in our opinion, calls for a divestiture of such interests whether such partial interest is in fee or through stock ownership or otherwise.

There is no evidence that in a city such as Cincinnati, in which a major defendant owns all of the first-run theatres, other exhibitors, affiliated or unaffiliated, have been prevented from also owning theatres for exhibition on first-run and there consequently is no monopoly in the legal sense, see United States v. Pullman Company, 64 F. Supp. 108, 112, and no reason for directing a divestiture. But when theatres are jointly owned by a major defendant and another party, it is evident that both joint owners wish to participate and indeed are directly or indirectly participating in the business of exhibiting motion pictures. In such case their joining of interests is illegal under the anti-trust laws for the reason that the major defendant thereby eliminates putative competition between itself and the other joint owner, who otherwise would be in a position to operate theatres independently. Such an elimination of competition is unreasonable in view of the defendant's being a powerful factor in the industry capable of exerting vast influence to its ends, and of the methods it has employed to restrain and control normal competition in distributing and exhibiting motion pictures through price-fixing, system of clearances, block-booking, pooling and the other practices we have alluded to.

We find such joint interests in a great number of theatres, a summary of which is set forth below,[11] and hold that they must be terminated by a sale to, or purchase from the co-owners or owners, or by a sale to a party not one of the other defendant-exhibitors. The decree or subsequent orders to be entered in conformity with this opinion will control sales or exchanges of such fractional interests for the purpose of restoring or creating a reasonable competition in the areas in question.

General Considerations

It may be said that such restrictions in commercial dealings as we would impose will interfere with the right of a copyright owner to choose his customers or contract for the disposition of his own property. The answer is that no such absolute right exists where its exercise will involve an extension of a copyright monopoly or an unreasonable interference with competition in the distribution and exhibition of moving pictures. A system of fixed admission prices, clearances and block-booking is so restrictive of competition in its tendency that it should be modified to comply with the terms of the Sherman Act. The modifications in practices we have indicated will relieve conditions that have grown up through the years. Indeed the practices are defended on the ground that business convenience and long usage ought to sanction them. But, in spite of their long continuance, we cannot escape the conclusion that in various ways the system stifles competition and violates the law and that business convenience and loyalty to former customers afford a lame excuse for depriving others of rights to compete and for perpetuating unreasonable restrictions. The remedy we are giving against the infractions is certainly no more drastic in effect than the one the Supreme Court granted in Interstate Circuit v. United States, 306 U. S. 208, nor more severe than the one it imposed in United States v. Crescent Amusement Co., 323 U. S. 173. The defendants have built up great business enterprises in a very popular field. Yet they have carried on practices we have found unduly restrictive of interstate commerce and even though we do not suggest that they any more than "those eighteen upon whom the tower in Siloam fell" have been "sinners above all men", yet measures should be taken to restore the moving picture business to a condition of competition that will benefit both competitors and the general public and to abate practices that are unlawful.

It is argued that the steps we have proposed would involve an interference with commercial practices that are generally acceptable and a hazardous attempt on the part of judges—unfamiliar with the details of business—to remodel its delicate adjustments which have hitherto provided the public with what is a new and great art. But we see nothing ruinous in the remedies proposed. Disputes which may arise under the bidding system are likely to relate to questions whether the bidder has a theatre adequate for the run for which he bids, whether the clearance requested is reasonable as regards his own theatre and those of others, and similar matters generally involved in comparing bids. If the defendants will consent to an arbitration system for the determination of such disputes of the kind that has worked so well under the consent decree, they will facilitate the adjustment of most of the differences that are likely to occur, with a large saving of time and money as compared with separate court actions.

A suit in the district court for violation of the Sherman Act is doubtless an awkward way to cure such ills as have arisen, but it is perhaps the best remedy now available to the government. There surely are evils in the existing system, and the Sherman Act provides a mode of correction which is lawfully invoked. At all events, that which is written is written, and is controlling on us.

It does not follow from the foregoing that we should wholly break up the exhibition business of each of the major defendants even though a "root and branch" decree might be legally possible. Such total divestiture would be injurious to the corporations concerned, and if we are right in our analysis of the situation, we should still have to give relief against price-fixing, systems of clearance, formula deals, master agreements and franchises, block-booking, pooling agreements, and other agreements we have held invalid. The relief proposed we believe should suffice, while total divestiture would be damaging to the public as well as to the defendants and not accomplish any useful purpose at the present time.

The Decree

A decree is granted in accordance with the views expressed in the foregoing opinion to be settled on ten days' notice. It should provide for the dismissal of all claims asserted by the plaintiff against any of the defendants which act only as producers of motion pictures and for the dismissal of claims against any other defendants based on their acts as producers, whether as individuals or in conjunction with others.

The granting of licenses by any of the defendant-distributors which fix minimum prices for admission to theatres either of the defendants or of any other exhibitor should be enjoined in which such minimum admission prices are fixed by the parties either in writing, or through a committee, or through arbitration, or upon the happening of any event, or in any other wise.

The defendants should be enjoined from concertedly agreeing to maintain a system of clearances as among themselves or with other exhibitors, and no clearances should be granted against theatres in substantial competition with the theatre receiving a license for exhibition a excess of what is reasonably necessary to protect the licensee in the run granted. Existing clearances in excess of what is reasonably necessary to protect the licensees in the runs awarded to them shall be invalid pro tanto. In determining what is a reasonable clearance the following factors should be taken into consideration:

(1) The admission prices of the theatres involved, as set by the exhibitor;

(2) The character and location of the theatres involved, including size, type of entertainment, appointments, transit facilities, etc.;

(3) The policy of operation of the theatres involved, such as the showing of double features, gift nights, give-aways, premiums, cut-rate tickets, lotteries, etc.;

(4) The rental terms and license fees paid by the theatres involved and the revenues derived by the distributor-defendants from such theatres;

(5) The extent to which the theatres involved compete with each other for patronage;

(6) The fact that a theatre involved is affiliated with a defendant-distributor or with an independent circuit of theatres should be disregarded; and

(7) There should be no clearance between theatres not in substantial competition.

The further performance by any of the defendants of existing formula deals, master agreements to the extent that we have previously found them invalid, or franchises should be enjoined and the defendants should also be enjoined from entering into or carrying out any similar agreements in the future.

Defendants owning a legal or equitable interest in theatres of ninety-five per cent or more either directly or through subsidiaries may exhibit pictures of their own or of their wholly owned subsidiaries in such theatres upon such terms as to admission prices and clearances and on such runs as they see fit.

No defendant or its subsidiaries shall exhibit its films other than on its own behalf or through wholly owned subsidiaries, or subsidiaries in which it has an interest of at least ninety-five per cent, without offering the license at a minimum price for any run desired by the operators of each theatre within the competitive area. The license desired shall in such case be granted to the highest responsible bidder having a theatre of a size and equipment adequate to show the picture upon the terms offered. The license shall be granted solely upon the merits and without discrimination in favor of affiliates, old customers, or any person whatever. Each license shall be offered and taken theatre by theatre and picture by picture. No contracts for exhibition shall be entered into, or if already outstanding shall be performed, in which the license to exhibit one feature is conditioned upon an agreement of the licensee to take a license of one or more other features, but licenses to exhibit more than one feature may be included in a single instrument provided the licensee shall have had the opportunity to bid for each feature separately and shall have made the best bid for each picture so included. To the extent that any of the pictures have not been trade-shown prior to the granting of a license for more than a single picture, the licensee shall be given by the licensor the right to reject a percentage of such pictures not trade-shown prior to the granting of the license to be fixed by the decree. But that right to reject any picture must be exercised within ten days after there has been an opportunity afforded to the licensee to inspect it.

The defendants shall be enjoined from entering into or continuing to perform existing pooling agreements whereby given theatres of two or more exhibitors, normally in competition, are operated as a unit or whereby the business policies of such exhibitors are collectively determined by a joint committee, or by one of the exhibitors, or whereby profits of the "pooled" theatres are divided among the owners according to pre-agreed percentages. They shall also be enjoined from making or continuing to perform agreements that the parties may not require other theatres in the competitive area without first offering them for inclusion in the pool. The making or continuance of leases of theatres under which defendants lease any of their theatres to another defendant or to an independent operating a theatre in the competitive area in return for a share of the profits shall be enjoined.

Each defendant shall cease and desist from ownership of an interest in any theatre, whether in fee or in stock or otherwise, in conjunction with another defendant-exhibitor. Each defendant shall cease and desist from ownership, jointly with an independent, of an interest in any theatre, greater than five per cent, unless such defendant's interest is ninety-five per cent or more; and where the interest of such defendant is more than five per cent and less than ninety-five per cent, such joint interests shall be dissolved either by a sale to, or by a purchase from, such co-owner or co-owners. Rearrangements of such joint interests with an independent, if by purchase, shall, however, be subject to the direction of this court so that their effectuation may promote competition in the exhibition of motion pictures. Where a defendant owns a ninety-five or greater per cent interest in any theatre, such theatre may be considered as its own so far as this opinion and the decree to be entered hereon are concerned. Each of the defendants shall be enjoined from expanding its theatre holdings except for the purpose of acquiring a co-owner's interest in jointly owned theatres, and this only in cases where the court shall permit such acquisition, instead of requiring an outright sale of the undivided interest of the defendant in question. The foregoing provisions as to divestiture of partial interests in theatres shall apply both to interests held in fee and beneficially and to those represented by shares of stock. But it shall not prevent a defendant from acquiring theatres or interests therein in order to protect its investments, or in order to enter a competitive field; if in the later case, this court or other competent authority shall approve the acquisition after due application is made therefor.

Each defendant shall be enjoined from operating, booking or film-buying through any agent who is also acting in such matters for any other exhibitor, independent or affiliated.

The decree shall also provide for arbitration of disputes as to bids, clearances, runs, and any other subjects appropriate for arbitration in respect to all parties who may consent to the creation of such tribunals for adjustment of such disputes. It shall also provide for an appeal board generally similar to the one created by the consent decree as to any parties consenting thereto. It shall make such disposition of the provisions of the existing consent decree signed November 30, 1940, as may be necessary in view of the foregoing opinion.

In order to secure compliance with the decree to be entered, duly authorized representatives of the Department of Justice shall on the written request of the Attorney General or the Assistant Attorney General in charge of anti-trust matters, and on reasonable notice to the defendant or defendants affected, be permitted reasonable access to all books and papers of the defendants and reasonable opportunity to interview their officers or employees, as provided in Section XVIII of the Consent Decree.

Proceedings under the decree to be entered shall be stayed pending appeal or for the purpose of enabling the parties to adjust their business without an unfair burden or as practice may require upon such terms as the decree shall provide.

Jurisdiction of this cause shall be retained for the purpose of enabling any of the parties to the decree to apply to the court at any time for such orders or directions as may be necessary or appropriate for the construction or carrying out of the same, for the enforcement of compliance therewith, and for the punishment of violations thereof, or for other or further relief.

Findings should be proposed by the parties for the assistance of the court, but such proposed findings will form no part of the record.

Memorandum In Re Findings and Decree

In order to meet some of the objections raised at the hearing to the system of bidding for features described in the opinion of the court, we have modified the system there proposed so that competitive bidding will only be necessary within a competitive area and in such an area where it is desired by the exhibitors. In other words, the decree provides an opportunity to bid for any exhibitor in a competitive area who may desire to do so.

The arrangement for arbitration and an appeal board has been terminated except as to unfinished litigations and other matters referred to in the decree, because of the unwillingness of some of the parties to consent to their continuance. Nevertheless, as we have indicated in the opinion, these tribunals have dealt with trade disputes, particularly those as to clearances and runs, with rare efficiency, as both government counsel and counsel for other parties have conceded.

Indeed, the arbitration system set up under the consent decree of November 20, 1940, was created pursuant to the prayer of the amended and supplemental complaint by the United States filed November 14, 1940, in which, among other things, the plaintiff prayed that "a nation-wide system of impartial arbitration tribunals or such other means of enforcement as the court may deem proper be established pursuant to the final decree of this court in order to secure adequate enforcement of whatever general and nation-wide prohibitions of illegal practices may be contained therein."

We strongly recommend that some such system be continued in order to avoid cumbersome and dilatory court litigation and to preserve the practical advantages of the tribunals created by the consent decree.

Summary of Argument	8
ARGUMENT—The Statutory Court wrongly inferred combination and conspiracy from certain uniformities found in the evidence	9
POINT I—A. The inclusion of a minimum admission price in exhibition license agreements does not constitute a violation of either the Sherman or Clayton Acts and is not price fixing. On the other hand it is essential in determining a fair license fee	13
B. Road shows	24
POINT II—The Statutory Court erred in including in its decree, subdivisions 7, 8 and 9 of II, that is, in setting up a prescribed manner and method which completely regulates the licensing of motion pictures for exhibition in theatres in the United States, which system completely disregards the rights of the owner of the copyright of each motion picture involved	25

PAGE

POINT III—The Statutory Court erred (a) In holding franchises illegal per se (R. 3696; subd. 5 of II of Decree); (b) In directing United Artists to disregard the rights of its old customers (R. 3697); as well as the right to select its own customers; (c) In enjoining clearance which was reasonably calculated to protect United Artists' revenue; (d) In finding that United Artists acted in concert with distributor defendants in the formation of a uniform system of clearances; (e) In finding that United Artists Corporation in any manner violated any of the provisions of the Sherman or Clayton Acts 34

The selection of one buyer and the exclusion of another, even though it severely handicaps the excluded buyer in his competitive position, does not make such selection a violation of the Sherman Act 41

Defendants-Appellants.

BRIEF ON BEHALF OF UNITED ARTISTS CORPORATION, APPELLANT

Opinions Below

The opinion of the District Court (R. 3504) is reported in 66 F. Supp. 323 and the Findings of Fact, Conclusions of Law and Decree and a supplemental opinion (R. 3659) are reported in 70 F. Supp. 53.

Jurisdiction

The jurisdiction of this Court to review by direct appeal the judgment and decree entered in this case is conferred by Section 2 of the Expediting Act of February 11, 1903, as amended (32 Stat. 823; 36 Stat. 1167; 58 Stat. 572; 15 U. S. C., Sec. 29), and Section 238 of the Judicial Code, as amended (36 Stat. 1157; 38 Stat. 804; 43 Stat. 938; 28 U. S. C., Sec. 345).

Probable jurisdiction was noted by this Court on June 23, 1947.

Specification of Assigned Errors To Be Urged

The appellant United Artists Corporation has specified in detail in its assignment of errors in what respect it contends that the Court below erred in making its findings of fact (Assignment of Errors 39-56; R. 3775-3779); in making the conclusions of law (Assignment of Errors 57-60; R. 3779-3781); in framing its decree (Assignment of Errors 61; 62, 63 and 64; R. 3781-3785); in not including in its findings, proposed findings by the appellant United Artists Corporation, which should have been made in order to arrive at proper conclusions of law (Assignment of Errors 1-36; R. 3768-3775); in not concluding that the appellant United Artists Corporation did not at any time, during the period involved, combine with the defendant exhibitors or any of their affiliates unreasonably to restrain interstate trade or commerce in motion picture films, to monopolize or attempt to monopolize the distribution or exhibition of motion picture films in the United States of America, and that a decree of dismissal should be entered as to the appellant United Artists Corporation (Assignment of Errors 37, 38; R. 3775).

The appellant United Artists Corporation regards the above assignment of errors as material to the issues presented in this brief.

Statement

This is an appeal (R. 3766) from a decree (R. 3694) of a statutory court in and for the Southern District of New York in a proceeding in equity (R. 3137) brought by the United States of America under Sections 1, 2 and 4 of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act to enjoin the eight appellant corporations.

Five of the appellants, Paramount Pictures, Inc., RKO Radio Pictures, Inc., Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc., Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation, and Loew's, Incorporated, are engaged in the production, distribution and exhibition of motion pictures. Two of the appellants, Columbia Pictures Corporation and Universal Pictures Company, Inc., are engaged in the production and distribution of motion pictures. The appellant, United Artists Corporation, is engaged solely in the distribution of motion pictures. All through the litigation the Government referred to the first five defendants (those engaged in production, distribution and exhibition) as the "Big Five", or the major defendants. Columbia, Universal and United Artists were characterized by the Government as the "Little Three", or the minor defendants.

The Government in its petition (R. 3200, subds. 5, 6 and 7 of Prayer for Relief) asked the Court to declare the integration of production and exhibition unlawful as an instrumentality of monopoly and restraint, and that the "Big Five" be directed to divest themselves of all interest and ownership in theatres. On page 3199 of the record, in three catch-all provisions of prayer, the Government asked for general relief against all the defendants. On page 3198 the Government refers to the alleged illegal contracts made by each defendant exhibitor with distributors generally.

These paragraphs of the petition, and the proof offered by the Government, clearly show that this charge of illegal practices is subordinate to the main relief the Government sought in the petition. These governmental afterthoughts are that illegal restraints were brought about by reason of (1) franchise agreements, under which the defendants granted exhibitors the right to exhibit pictures of more than one season's product; (2) pooling arrangements, under which the major defendants pooled their theatres with each other or with third parties; (3) block booking, under which defendants sold a season's product in advance of production; (4) preferential runs, by which defendants' theatres were favored with respect to first run exhibitions and obtained a monopoly of the playing time in the better theatres; (5) unreasonable clearance, by means of which defendants' theatres obtained more protection than was necessary in the exhibition of their pictures as a consequence of which independent theatres were relegated to an inferior and unprofitable run; (6) minimum admission prices, under which the defendants compelled independent exhibitors to keep up admission prices, thereby resulting in a favored position to the affiliated theatres.

The statutory court did not order divestiture or divorcement as requested by the Government, but in effect stated that if the practices referred to in the preceding paragraph were enjoined, and the statutory court's auction block method of selling substituted, that in its opinion the abuses complained of would be eliminated.

The Government has appealed from the Decree of the statutory court and has assigned as error (pp. 3721 to 3723 inclusive) the statutory court's failure to order divorcement and divestiture; and has assigned as further error, the conclusion that competitive bidding would afford appropriate relief from the abuses complained of; in fact, has assigned as error practically every provision of the decree.

The record herein shows that there are over 18,000 motion picture theatres in the United States (R. 3684), and that motion pictures are played in these theatres on runs. Theatres which generally exhibit motion pictures first, in a competitive area, are referred to as "first-run" theatres. Generally, these are the best theatres in the localities, either by appointments or seating capacity or location (R. 419-420, 702-703, 1510-1511, 1697-1700, 1901-1902, 2043-2044).

Theatres which follow first-run theatres in exhibition in point of time, are referred to as "subsequent run" theatres.

United Artists Corporation was formed in 1919 (R. 1406, 1407) by Mary Pickford, Charles Chaplin, Douglas Fairbanks, and D. W. Griffith, as an outlet for the distribution of feature motion pictures made by independent producers (R. 1409). It generally distributes—when it has a good year—twenty to twenty-six feature pictures, and has handled as low as four in a season (R. 1409), and at no time has it ever distributed as much as five percent of the feature pictures distributed in the United States of America by the eight different distributors (See Findings of Fact 108; R. 3679).

The Government in this case called no witnesses. Its evidence consisted exclusively of documents and data obtained from the defendants through interrogatories and demands for admission. No exhibitor testified that he had been in any way injured by any of the activities of any of the defendants.

United Artists' Corporation's position in this lawsuit is unique. It produces no pictures; neither owns nor operates any theatres; has licensed its pictures from the inception of the company, individually and separately, and, generally on separate contracts for each picture for each theatre. The Court's findings of fact as to United Artists (R. 3676; Findings of Fact 95, 96) read as follows:

> "95. United Artists did not at any time license the exhibition of its pictures in blocks but on the contrary licensed the exhibition of its pictures separately and individually.

"96. During the period in question United Artists did not condition the licensing of any photoplay in any exhibitor's theatre upon that exhibitor's agreement to license other United photoplays for exhibition in said theatre."

In addition, the defendant United Artists Corporation used an entirely different provision in its license agreements in connection with minimum admission prices (Gov. Ex. 288, R. 274), that is, a mere warranty that on the day the license agreement was signed the exhibitor was charging a certain admission price—with no agreement that he maintain that admission price for the run of the picture. Notwithstanding this varied evidence, the Court in its decree made no exception as to United Artists Corporation, but included it in all the regulatory provisions relating to distribution.

The Statutes Involved

The United States Statutes under which the case was prosecuted were the Sherman Anti-Trust Act (Sections 1, 2 and 4, Act of July 2, 1890, 26 Stat. 209, as amended; 15 U. S. C. A., Sections 1, 2 and 4; 4 F. C. A., Title 15, Sections 1, 2 and 4), the pertinent provisions of which are as follows:

"Sec. 1. Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce, among the several States, or with foreign nations, is hereby declared to be illegal; * * *"

"Sec. 2. Every person who shall monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce, among the several States, or with foreign nations, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, * * *"

"Sec. 4. The several district courts of the United States are invested with jurisdiction to prevent and restrain violations of sections 1 to 7, inclusive, or section 15 of this chapter; and it shall be the duty of the several district attorneys of the United States, in their respective districts, under the direction of the Attorney General, to institute proceedings in equity to prevent and restrain such violations. * * *"

Also directly involved is the Fifth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States:

"No person shall be held to answer for a capital, or otherwise infamous crime, unless on a presentment or indictment of a Grand Jury, except in cases arising in the land or naval forces, or in the Militia, when in actual service in time of War or public danger; nor shall any person be subject for the same offense to be twice put in jeopardy of life or limb; nor shall be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself, nor be deprived of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law; nor shall private property be taken for public use, without just compensation."

Also directly involved is the Copyright Act of March 4, 1909 (35 Stat. Part 1, pp. 1075-1088), as amended August 24, 1912 (37 Stat. Part 1, pp. 488-490), U. S. C. A. Title 17, and particularly that portion thereof which reads as follows:

"That any person entitled thereto, upon complying with the provisions of this Act, shall have the exclusive right:

(a) To print, reprint, publish, copy and vend the copyrighted work;

(b) To translate the copyrighted work into other languages or dialects, or make any other version thereof, if it be a literary work; to dramatize it if it be a non-dramatic work; * * *

(d) To perform or represent the copyrighted work publicly if it be a drama or, if it be a dramatic work and not reproduced in copies for sale, to vend any manuscript or any record whatsoever thereof; to make or to procure the making of any transcription or record thereof by or from which, in whole or in part, it may in any manner or by any method be exhibited, performed, represented, produced, or reproduced; and to exhibit, perform, represent, produce or reproduce it in any manner or by any method whatsoever.

* * * * *

Sec. 5. That the application for registration shall specify to which of the following classes the work in which copyright is claimed belongs: * * *

(l) Motion-picture photoplays;
(m) Motion pictures other than photoplays; * * *"

Summary of Argument

1. The Government did not prove a prima facie case against United Artists Corporation, and its petition should have been dismissed, either at the close of the Government's case or at the close of the whole case.

2. The uniformities from which the Statutory Court inferred conspiracy and combination, completely negate any idea of conspiracy and combination and are affirmative proof of competition.

3. The Statutory Court had no power by statute or otherwise to legislate the future manner and method of marketing motion pictures in the United States of America. II, Sections 1 to 9 inclusive, Final Decree, R. 3695 to 3698.

4. The Statutory Court erred in finding illegal the following trade practices whether indulged in or not by the defendant United Artists Corporation:

a. franchises;
b. formula deals;
c. licensing of runs including clearances;
d. clearances;
e. availabilities;
f. insertion of admission prices in license agreements.

ARGUMENT

The Statutory Court wrongly inferred combination and conspiracy from certain uniformities found in the evidence.

It is appellant's contention that the uniformities found are inevitable because of the keenness of the competition in the motion picture business. Being inevitable because of that competition, they cannot furnish the basis on which to conclude that there had been combination and conspiracy.

Further, if either an innocent or guilty inference may be drawn from the facts proven, the statutory court is legally bound to accept the innocent inference.

The Government offered no direct evidence of combination or conspiracy as to any of the distributors, and particularly as to the United Artists Corporation.

The principal uniformities relied upon were, first, that wherever minimum admission prices were found in any contracts, these minimum admission prices were generally the same; second, that a specific theatre would generally license the same run of exhibition from each distributor, and, third, if clearances were specified, the clearance with each distributor would be the same.

From these uniformities the Court inferred combination and conspiracy.

The only direct evidence offered on these matters was offered by the defendants and this evidence abundantly shows that like other businesses there are certain uniformities that will of necessity result from competition rather than from combination and conspiracy.

The fact that United Artists solely through competition accepts the standard practices of the business in order to license its pictures to exhibitors, does not prove that United Artists was in combination and conspiracy to stifle competition.

Every distributor testified that the admission prices inserted in license agreements, were the admission prices charged by the exhibitor at the time of the making of the license.

The Court so found, R. 3670, Finding 63: "The minimum admission prices included in license of each of the eight distributor defendants for any given theatre are in general uniform, being the usual admission prices currently charged by the exhibitor."

As to runs being uniform, any theatre operating in any competitive neighborhood or non-competitive neighborhood would of necessity seek the same run from each distributor. It is important to the exhibitor that a patron attending that theatre shall know that that theatre operates on the same run week after week and season after season. Uniformity proves nothing.

As to uniformity of intervals of time between runs, or clearance, a distributor is required by the exhibitor to allow the same clearance as that which exhibitor receives from the distributor's competitors; in other words, the distributor must meet competition.

If competition is met uniformity follows. The same uniformities may be found in department stores. It is a well known fact that every department store employs professional shoppers to visit competing stores so as to make sure that they are not over-selling any particular piece of merchandise.

There is nothing new or novel in uniformity resulting from competition. Examples ad infinitum of uniformities in commercial business are known to this Court. The record discloses the keenest competition between the eight distributors to license as many runs as possible in as many theatres as possible on the best terms available.

A distributor like United Artists which has no theatre outlets of its own must sell the market as it finds it.

It did not create the market. It could not create a market because as the undisputed evidence shows, during the twenty-six years of its existence the minimum number of pictures it released in one year was as small as four and the maximum approximately only twenty-five. See R. 1409; see also R. 154.

It could not with the exception of possibly two cities (New York and Los Angeles) in any year of its existence, keep one first run theatre supplied with a sufficient number of pictures to operate fifty-two weeks in any year.

It had no steady supply of motion pictures at any time. In fact, the evidence shows that one year, to-wit: 43-44, it had a first class feature for release on Labor Day and not another first class feature until January of 1944 (R. 1409).

It maintained its individual selling policy at all times, and because of its peculiar set-up, nothing could have been offered by the Government to indicate directly or indirectly that it combined or conspired with another distributor or exhibitor to violate any provision of either the Sherman or Clayton Acts (R. 1411-1414).

If uniformities resulted from licensing any United Artists picture to any exhibitor, whether run, clearance, availability, or admission price, these uniformities were the direct result of the competition that the United Artists must meet if it wishes to sell any part of the market it found for its product.

The exhibitor says, if you want to sell me you must sell me this run, this availability, this is my admission price, this is the clearance that I insist upon, this is the clearance I am able to obtain on my other licenses. You either sell me on this basis or I am not interested in your product. And a product so unimportant as United Artists Corporation (numerically) either will be shown or not shown in a particular theatre or theatres depending upon the will of the exhibitor.

If United Artists Corporation is compelled to adopt the regulations set up by the Statutory Court for the licensing of motion pictures, it cannot license its product in any theatre

1. for the same run other distributors license product, because the inevitable result would be uniformity;
2. on the same availability, result uniformity;
3. with the same clearance, result uniformity;
4. with the same provisions as to admission prices, result uniformity.

United Artists Corporation, which owns no theatres and is engaged solely in the distribution of motion pictures produced by independent producers, would be in the unfortunate position of being unable to license any of the fine pictures referred to in Mr. Lazarus' testimony (R. 1409), for exhibition in any theatres.

POINT I

A. The inclusion of a minimum admission price in exhibition license agreements does not constitute a violation of either the Sherman or Clayton Acts and is not price fixing. On the other hand it is essential in determining a fair license fee.

The licensing or distribution of motion pictures is in effect the licensing of "make-believe". No tangible, personal property is sold. In the positive print which is delivered to the exhibitor as an incident to the license there is found a successive series of photographic images that come to life on the screen. Along the edge of the positive print is a sound track. This sound track is synchronized with the photographic images. Reels of this positive print are placed in a projection booth, generally found in the rear of the theatre, and by some magic or wizardry which we cannot explain the photographic part is projected on the screen at the front of the theatre and the sound from the sound track, in synchronization with the photographic images, is broadcast from horns in back of the screen. The result is a dramatic performance, more or less entertaining, depending upon the quality of the picture. This, even in the days of silent pictures, was held to be a dramatic performance. See Kalem v. Harper, 222 U. S. 55.

The distributor of a picture is interested not only for its reward as stipulated in the license agreement, but for future business dealings with the licensee, upon the admission fees paid by the public for admission to each public performance. At page 1460 of the printed record, as well as at many other points therein, it was incontrovertibly shown that there is no sale of tangible property involved in an exhibition license agreement.

Each exhibition license agreement is in reality the right publicly to perform a dramatic composition on the screen before an audience who paid an admission to get into the theatre to see the public performance. The print of the picture is not sold, but licensed. It is a non-assignable license, and upon completion of the limited engagement of the particular photoplay in the particular theatre, the print must be returned to the licensor.

In the price-fixing cases in which the Courts have condemned price fixing we find an entirely different set of facts.

In Bobbs-Merrill Co. v. Straus, 210 U. S. 339, this Court laid down the rule on price fixing which has been followed right down to the present time.

At page 349 Justice Day, who delivered the unanimous opinion of the Court, in referring to the copyright statute, writes as follows:

> "What does the statute mean in granting 'the sole right of vending the same'? Was it intended to create a right which would permit the holder of the copyright to fasten, by notice in a book or upon one of the articles mentioned within the statute, a restriction upon the subsequent alienation of the subject matter of copyright after the owner had parted with the title to one who had acquired full dominion over it and had given a satisfactory price for it? It is not denied that one who has sold a copyright article, without restriction, has parted with all right to control the sale of it. The purchaser of a book, once sold by authority of the owner of the copyright, may sell it again, although he could not publish a new edition of it." (Italics ours.)

In the case at bar United did not sell a copyrighted article. It retained title to the article at all times.

Paraphrasing the preceding language of the Supreme Court, the exhibitor, licensing the right to exhibit, could only publicly perform on the days specified. He could not make a sale of the article, as he never had title to the article. He could not assign the exhibition license because it was non-assignable. He could not print or publish a new edition of the copyrighted article because he had no right to do so.

The Court then goes on at page 350:

"In this case the stipulated facts show that the books sold by the appellant were sold at wholesale, and purchased by those who made no agreement as to the control of future sales of the book, and took upon themselves no obligation to enforce the notice printed in the book, undertaking to restrict retail sales to a price of $1 per copy. The precise question, therefore, in this case is, Does the sole right to vend (named in § 4952) secure to the owner of the copyright the right, after a sale of the book to the purchaser, to restrict future sales of the book at retail, to the right to sell it at a certain price per copy, because of a notice in the book that a sale at a different price will be treated as an infringement, which notice has been brought home to one undertaking to sell for less than the named sum? We do not think the statute can be given such a construction, and it is to be remembered that this is purely a question of statutory construction. There is no claim in this case of contract limitation, nor license agreement controlling the subsequent sales of the book.

"In our view the copyright statutes, while protecting the owner of the copyright in his right to multiply and sell his production, do not create the right to impose, by notice, such as is disclosed in this case, a limitation at which the books shall be sold at retail by future purchasers, with whom there is no privity of contract. This conclusion is reached in view of the language of the statute read in the light of its main purpose to secure the right of multiplying copies of the work,—a right which is the special creation of the statute. True, the statute also secures, to make this right of multiplication effectual, the sole right to vend copies of the book, the production of the author's thought and conception. The owner of the copyright in this case did sell copies of the book in quantities and at a price satisfactory to it. It has exercised the right to vend. What the complainant contends for embraces not only the right to sell the copies, but to qualify the title of a future purchaser by the reservation of the right to have the remedies of the statute against an infringer because of the printed notice of its purpose so to do unless the purchaser sells at a price fixed in the notice. To add to the right of exclusive sale the authority to control all future retail sales, by a notice that such sales must be made at a fixed sum, would give a right not included in the terms of the statute, and, in our view, extend its operation, by construction, beyond its meaning, when interpreted with a view to ascertaining the legislative intent in its enactment." (Italics ours.)

See also:

Scribner v. Straus, 210 U. S., p. 352.

Government counsel below cited a number of tying-in cases involving the patent law which clearly have no application to the case at bar.

It would seem that a condition precedent to illegality, in a price-fixing situation, is that the vendor must exercise the right to vend and part with title.

In Straus v. Victor Talking Machine Co., 243 U. S. 490, a divided Court condemned the method used by the Victor Talking Machine Co. to control resales. In referring to the deceptive notice that appeared on the talking machine the Court, at page 500, says:

"It thus becomes clear that this 'License Notice' is not intended as a security for any further payment upon the machine for the full price called a 'royalty' was paid before the Plaintiff parted with the possession of it • • •

"Courts would be perversely blind if they failed to look through such an attempt as this 'License Notice' thus plainly is to sell property for a full price and yet to place restraints upon its further alienation such as have been hateful to the law from Lord Coke's day to ours, because obnoxious to the public interest."

Again in the case at bar the same prints are leased time and again. The evidence indicates that 300 prints served 12,000 customers, so at no time does any one customer pay the cost of the production of the device that is licensed—that is, the cost of the negative from which the print is taken, plus the cost of each particular print. The customer merely pays a license fee for the right to perform, and the license fee is based upon the admission price the particular theatre charges.

Judge Chestnut in the case of Westway Theatres v. 20th Century Fox, 30 Fed. Supp. 830, in effect says:

> "The legal effect of a copyright is to create in the owner an exclusive property right with the incidental power to lease or license the use thereof by others on stipulated terms." (Italics ours.)

In Interstate Circuit v. United States, 306 U. S. 208, there were two opinions. There was a prevailing opinion by Justice Stone, in which four of his colleagues concurred, and a dissenting opinion by Justice Roberts, in which two of his colleagues concurred, Justice Frankfurter taking no part in the case.

We will confine our discussion to the prevailing opinion:

At page 219 Justice Stone says:

> "The trial court found that the distributor appellants agreed and conspired among themselves to take uniform action upon the proposals made by Interstate, and that they agreed and conspired with each other and with Interstate to impose the demanded restrictions upon all subsequent-run exhibitors in Dallas, Fort Worth, Houston and San Antonio; that they carried out the agreement by imposing the restrictions upon their subsequent-run licensees in those cities, causing some of them to increase their admission price to 25 cents, either generally or when restricted pictures were shown, and to abandon double-billing of all such pictures, and causing the other subsequent-run exhibitors, who were either unable or unwilling to accept the restrictions, to be deprived of any opportunity to exhibit the restricted pictures, which were the best and most popular of all new feature pictures; that the effect of the restrictions upon 'low-income members of the community' patronizing the theatres of these exhibitors was to withhold from them altogether the 'best entertainment furnished by the motion picture industry'; and that the restrictions operated to increase the income of the distributors and of Interstate and to deflect attendance from later-run exhibitors who yielded to the restrictions to the first-run theatres of Interstate.

"The court concluded as matters of law that the agreement of the distributors with each other and those with Interstate to impose the restrictions upon subsequent-run exhibitors and the carrying of the agreements into effect with the aid and participation of Hoblitzelle and O'Donnell, constituted a combination and conspiracy in restraint of interstate commerce in violation of the Sherman Act. It also concluded that each separate agreement between Interstate and a distributor, that Interstate should subject itself to the restrictions in its subsequent-run theatres and that the distributors should impose the restrictions on all subsequent-run theatres in the Texas cities as a condition of supplying them with its feature pictures, was likewise a violation of the Act."

At page 222 Justice Stone continues:

"There was a risk, too, that without agreement diversity of action would follow. Compliance with the proposals involved a radical departure from the previous business practices of the industry and a drastic increase in admission prices of most of the subsequent-run theatres. Acceptance of the proposals was discouraged by at least three of the distributors' local managers. Independent exhibitors met and organized a futile protest which they presented to the representatives of Interstate and Consolidated. While as a result of independent negotiations either of the two restrictions without the other could have been put in effect by any one or more of the distributors and in any one or more of the Texas cities served by Interstate, the negotiations which ensued and which in fact did result in modifications of the proposals resulted in substantially unanimous action of the distributors, both as to the terms of the restrictions and in the selection of the four cities where they were to operate." (Italics ours.)

In other words, the majority of the Court affirmatively says that one distributor, acting independently, could have placed either of the restrictions in any license agreement it made with any exhibitor.

> "We have no occasion now to pass upon these or related questions. Granted that each distributor, in the protection of his own copyright monopoly, was free to impose the present restrictions upon his licensees, we are nevertheless of the opinion that they were not free to use their copyrights as implements for restraining commerce in order to protect Interstate's motion picture theatre monopoly by suppressing competition with it. The restrictions imposed upon Interstate's competitors did not have their origin in the voluntary act of the distributors or any of them. They gave effect to the will and were subject to the control of Interstate, not by virtue of any copyright of Interstate, for it had none, but through its contract with each distributor. Interstate was able to acquire the control and impose its will by force of its monopoly of first-run theatres in the principal cities of Texas and the threat to use its monopoly position against copyright owners who did not yield to its demands. The purpose and ultimate effect of each of its contracts with the distributors was to restrain its competitors in the theatre business by forcing an increase in their admission price and compelling them through the double feature restriction to make their entertainment less attractive, and to preclude the distributors for the specified time from relaxing the pressure of the restrictions upon them.
> "The case is not one of the mere restriction of competition between the first showing of a copyrighted film by Interstate and a subsequent showing of the same film by a licensee of the copyright owner. The contract, when applied to the situation existing in the four Texas cities, had a more extensive effect. Both Interstate's first-run and second-run theatres in each of the cities regularly compete with the independent second-run theatres in those cities. Since all are in practically continuous operation during the season, competition between them extends to the exhibition of films furnished by different distributors including those of copyright owners shown by independents which compete with those of other copyright owners shown at the same time by Interstate. Moreover, the provision in Interstate's contracts for the restriction against double billing stipulated for restraint upon competition with Interstate in the exhibition of films in the double bill in which neither Interstate nor the licensor had any interest by way of copyright or otherwise. The patent effect of the contract was to impose an undue restraint both as to admission price and the character of the exhibition upon competing theatre businesses habitually exhibiting the competitive pictures of different copyright owners. Through acceptance of the terms by the principal distributors the contract became the ready instrument by which Interstate succeeded in dominating the business of its competitors in the Texas cities. The fact that the restrictions may have been of a kind which a distributor could voluntarily have imposed, but did not, does not alter the character of the contract as a calculated restraint upon the distribution and use of copyrighted films moving in interstate commerce. Even if it be assumed that the benefit to the distributor from the restrictions is one which it might have secured through its monopoly control of the copyright alone, that would not extend the protection of the copyright to the contract with Interstate and to the resulting restraint upon the competition of its business rivals." (Italics ours.)

It will be seen therefore that the Supreme Court in the Interstate case did not, as the Government contends, take away the right of each distributor, acting separately, to insert a minimum admission price.

As to the forms of the contracts put in evidence in this case, Circuit Judge Hand compared them to the standard provisions of an insurance contract. As a matter of fact, there are many differences between the various forms. The essential details are written in blank spaces in the contract, i.e., the picture or pictures licensed, the license fees—whether percentage, guarantee against percentage, guarantee against overage or flat rental. These are clearly matters of negotiation. Likewise, the specific run or runs licensed, the various clearances, if any, the minimum admission prices to be charged for the specific engagement, etc. All these are typed either in the blank spaces in the printed form or on riders attached to the form.

The printed provisions of the agreement might be described as administrative provisions or mechanical provisions. For instance, manner of delivery of the print, what happens if the print is damaged or destroyed, the return of the print, requirements as to advertising the photoplay in the manner directed by the distributor. All these provisions are administrative or mechanical and have never been condemned in any litigation tried either by the Government or by private parties.

Now, as to United Artists:

1) The Government has put in evidence two forms of exhibition license agreements used by United Artists (G. Exs. 287-288, R. 274).

2) It has put in evidence an agreement made with Publix Theatres Corporation which expired in 1933.

3) It has put in evidence several hundred contracts without any supporting evidence of any kind or character that any of these contracts affected a competitor adversely, or the public adversely, or that any of them, in any way, violates either the Sherman Act or the Clayton Act.

As pointed out in the early part of this division of the argument, the United Artists Corporation depends upon its reward from each license from each theatre, whether these licenses be measured by a percentage of the gross receipts or a flat rental,—which are the two ordinary methods of doing business. As to the first manner, to wit:

percentage, a distributor and an exhibitor sit down and negotiate as to the amount of percentage the distributor will receive and the exhibitor will pay for the license granted. The admission price to be charged is not only an important element in the negotiation but is absolutely essential in determining the percentage to be charged. For instance, if a theatre will charge 50¢ admission fee for each performance that a particular picture is to be exhibited, then 35% of the gross receipts might be the negotiated satisfactory percentage that the distributor would accept. On the contrary, if a theatre charged 10¢, 35% would be wholly inacceptable to the distributor.

The Statutory Court in its opinion, page 3533 of the record, in discussing clearance, says:

1. "The admission price, as set by the exhibitors, of the theatres involved, * * * *"

The Court would have been equally accurate if it said that in determining the percentage to be charged for a percentage engagement, the admission price is the all-important factor.

Likewise, in determining flat rentals, the admission price is equally important. A salesman or a distributor when he agrees to a flat rental clearly has percentage in mind. He bases that flat rental upon the ability of that theatre to gross, and to gross at the present admission price, and he seeks to get the highest flat rental he can secure, always keeping in mind the gross of that particular theatre.

The Statutory Court has laid down many other rules for the determination of clearance, commencing on page 3533 of the record. If these rules of negotiation for clearance are sound the same rules must apply to either the percentage or the flat rental to be charged for each license.

Resuming the discussion of the Statutory Court's erroneous finding on price fixing we now cite Bement v. Harrow, 186 U. S. 70, General Electric v. United States, 272 U. S. 476, and United States v. U. S. Gypsum Co., 67 Fed. Supp.

397. In United States v. General Electric Company, the Court held, among other things:

a. "Conveying less than title to the patent, or part of it, a patentee may grant a license to make, use, and vend articles under the specifications of the patent, for any royalty, or upon any condition, the performance of which is reasonably within the reward which the patentee by grant of the patent is entitled to secure."

b. "After a patentee sells the patented article he can exercise no further control over what the purchaser may wish to do with the article."

c. "A patentee in granting a license to another to make and sell the patented article may limit the method of sale and the price, provided the conditions of sale are normally and reasonably adapted to secure pecuniary reward for the patentee's monopoly."

This case is cited with approval in United States v. United States Gypsum Co. (supra).

These authorities are in direct line with the argument advanced that there is no sale of a tangible or intangible article. In this case, there is a mere license of a performing right and a regulation of the price to be charged the public to see the performance.

As pointed out in the argument on uniformities, the admission price inserted is the admission price generally charged by the exhibitor (f.f. 63)—3670R—and the price fixed for exhibition, whether flat rental or percentage, is based upon the admission price.

The Statutory Court in its decree in completely eliminating the right of the distributor to insert admission prices in its contracts, went much further than its opinion. In its opinion it found conspiracy from the uniformities above referred to, notwithstanding its own finding of fact that the admission prices generally were those charged by the exhibitor at the time of the making of the license. It completely legislated this right to insert admission prices from all contracts made by United Artists Corporation for future licensing of its product, and by so doing overruled or disregarded United States v. Interstate, 306 U. S. 208, which expressly held that the owner of the copyright had this particular right in connection with the use of his copyrighted property.

B. Road shows.

During the past thirty years a limited number of motion pictures starting with the "Birth of a Nation" have been "road-showed" as the term is theatrically understood (R. 3660). This generally means that the pictures were exhibited in quite the same manner as the legitimate theatre is operated, that is, advanced admission prices ($2, for the evening performances generally), reserved seats, and generally only two or three shows in a day.

Before the Statutory Court an effort was made to exempt road shows from the provisions of the decree.

The Statutory Court completely ignored this economic necessity in its decree and made no provision for road shows. This is a complete disregard of the property rights of the producer of this type of picture. These pictures are produced at terrific cost; there can be no violation of the Sherman Act or interference with interstate commerce in any way by this type of exhibition.

Irrespective of the other conclusions reached by the Statutory Court, it should have made some provision to take care of this type of exhibition.

POINT II

The Statutory Court erred in including in its decree, subdivisions 7, 8 and 9 of II, that is, in setting up a prescribed manner and method which completely regulates the licensing of motion pictures for exhibition in theatres in the United States, which system completely disregards the rights of the owner of the copyright of each motion picture involved.

A feature motion picture is a copyrighted work. In the case of the United Artists Corporation, these feature motion pictures are produced by independent producers who use their own funds to finance production, then enter into a license agreement with the United Artists Corporation, granting the United Artists Corporation a percentage of the gross receipts to distribute said motion pictures to theatres in the United States of America and elsewhere (R. 1409).

Certain restrictive provisions are contained in the agreement between the producer and United Artists Corporation. For instance, each motion picture must be licensed separately and apart from the motion pictures of other producers (R. 1411).

Secondly, the producer retains the right to appoint a representative at the home office of the United Artists Corporation in New York City, for the purpose of approving or rejecting each separate license agreement for the exhibition of said motion picture. The pertinent excerpts of these distribution license agreements were introduced in evidence before the Statutory Court and may be found in the record, Volume 3, pages 1411 to 1414 inclusive. Since the foundation of the company, for the most part, the United Artists Corporation has licensed its pictures individually on separate contracts—one picture, one theatre.

The Statutory Court, however, is not satisfied to allow the United Artists Corporation to continue doing business in this manner.

The Court says, in subdivision 7, that United Artists is enjoined and restrained from performing or entering into any license in which the right to exhibit one feature is conditioned upon the licensee taking one or more other features. There is no evidence in the record that United Artists Corporation ever committed such an act.

Let us assume for the sake of argument that it did commit such an act. Where is there any illegality? United Artists Corporation may have a half dozen feature motion pictures ready for showing in a given theatre.

It controls the selling or licensing of the public performing rights of these six attractions. The Court, by injecting this provision, says in effect that the licensee or exhibitor or theatre owner shall have the right to say to the United Artists, "You have offered me six motion pictures, I will only license one."

In other words, the Court by decree destroys the right of the United Artists to select its own customer and license or not license, as in its judgment it deems best, for the best interest of its producers, and completely turns over to the exhibitor the entire negotiating advantage.

The Court in the same paragraph grants the exhibitor the right to reject twenty percent of any features licensed which were not "trade shown" prior to the granting of the license. In other words, if United Artists Corporation sat down with an exhibitor and, separately and independently, negotiated a license agreement which included five motion pictures, the minds of both parties meeting on terms,—notwithstanding the completed agreement, the exhibitor could eliminate from such license agreement at least one of the five motion pictures and neither play the picture nor pay the license fee. It is submitted that this is judicial legislation and completely destructive of the rights of free trade and enterprise.

Paragraph 8 of subdivision 2, page 3696 of the transcript of record, is even worse. This is the so-called competitive bidding provision. Under what law has the Statutory Court any right to single out one industry, in fact one branch of an industry, to wit, distribution of motion pictures, and in effect say you may own the distribution rights of these motion pictures but we are going to tell you exactly how you are going to license them in distribution—not how you must not license them where a law violation has been found—but how you must license them. You may no longer select your own customers, deal or not deal as you see fit—from now on pictures will be licensed only on the auction block, and at that on a very frail and contradictory auction block.

Paragraphs a, b, c, d and e of subdivision 8 of Section 2 are mandatory in form and a "must" to be followed.

These paragraphs are full of inconsistencies. For example, consider paragraphs a and c. If United Artists Corporation should attempt to license its pictures to an exhibitor in any particular area claimed to be competitive, any other exhibitor may invoke the provisions of subdivision c which does not include simultaneous exhibitions and immediately it is impossible to go forward under subdivision a.

Under c, United Artists Corporation must establish what in its opinion are competitive areas, and if there be any clearance provisions in any license, made on the auction block under subdivision c, the distributor then must meet the tests of clearance in subdivision 4, and be prepared to sustain the burden of proof as to the legality of any clearance granted in any license agreement, even though subdivision 4 says only such clearance as the exhibitor reasonably needs shall be granted on any run.

It is respectfully submitted that subdivision 8 and its various sub-subdivisions are far more drastic examples of judicial legislation even than 7. There is nothing in the Sherman Act or the Clayton Act, or any reported decisions, that bestows on any Court of this land the power minutely to prescribe the entire manner and method that a company, operating in so-called free trade and enterprise, shall use in order to engage in competitive business.

The distributors of motion pictures have been singled out from all industry to test the selling theories of this Statutory Court.

This Court may take judicial notice of such famous brand names as Hickey Freeman clothes for men, Johnson Murphy shoes, Chevrolet automobiles, and many others which sell through exclusive channels.

Hickey Freeman may be found generally in only one clothing store in each competitive area. Likewise Johnson Murphy shoes.

Chevrolet cars are generally handled by only one dealer in each competitive area.

Examples, ad infinitum, of exclusive handling are within the knowledge of every member of this learned Court. This is made possible because the manufacturer or distributor has the right to select his own channel of merchandising. There should be no different rule in the licensing of motion pictures. The law is well settled on this point.

The Sherman Act provides against the continuance of practices found unlawful, and does not authorize the Court to prescribe affirmative ways of doing business. This is a legislative function, not a judicial one.

Hartford Empire Co. v. U. S., 323 U. S. 386. The Court in this case was faced with the difficult problem of awarding an injunction which would insure the desired need without imposing punishment or other obligations for past misconduct. The problem was especially difficult in view of the status and relationship of the parties. Mr. Justice Roberts, who delivered the opinion of the Court, at page 409, stated:

> "The applicable principles are not doubtful. The Sherman Act provides criminal penalties for its violation, and authorizes the recovery of a penal sum in addition to damages in a civil suit by one injured by violation. It also authorizes an injunction to prevent continuing violations by those acting contrary to its proscriptions. The present suit is in the last named category and we may not impose penalties (Standard Oil Co. v. United States, 221 U. S. 1, 77, 78, 55 L. ed. 619, 652, 653, 31 S. Ct. 502, 34 LRA (NS) 834, Ann Cas. 1912D 734) in the guise of preventing future violations. This is not to say that a decree need deal only with the exact type of acts found to have been committed (Ethyl Gasoline Corp. v. United States, 309 U. S. 436, 461, 84 L. ed. 852, 863, 60 S. Ct. 618) or that the court should not, in framing its decree, resolve all doubts in favor of the Government (Local 167, I. B. T. v. United States, 291 U. S. 293, 299, 78 L. ed. 804, 809, 54 S. Ct. 396) or may not prohibit acts which in another setting would be unobjectionable. But, even so, the court may not create, as to the defendants, new duties, prescription of which is the function of Congress, or place the defendants, for the future, 'in a different class than other people,' as the Government has suggested. The decree must not be 'so vague as to put the whole conduct of the defendants' business at the peril of a summons for contempt;' enjoin 'all possible breaches of the law;' (Swift & Co. v. United States, 196 U. S. 375, 396, 49 L. ed. 518, 524, 25 S. Ct. 276; National Labor Relations Bd. v. Express Pub. Co., 312 U. S. 426, 433, 435, 436, 85 L. ed. 930, 935-937, 61 S. Ct. 693) or cause the defendants hereafter not 'to be under the protection of the law of the land.' (New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. v. Interstate Commerce Commission, 200 U. S. 361, 404, 50 L. ed. 515, 526, 26 S. Ct. 272; Standard Oil Co. v. United States, supra (221 U. S. 80), 55 L. ed. 653, 31 S. Ct. 502, 34 L. R. A. (NS) 834, Ann. Cas. 1912D 734.) • • •." (Italics ours.)

In the case of U. S. v. Pullman, 50 Fed. Supp. 123, the plaintiff suggested that in the case of a finding of violation, the question concerning relief might be referred to a Master, or one of the regulatory commissions, to hold hearings at which experts, governmental or private, could state their views regarding proper organization of the business of passenger transportation in the United States.

In respect to this suggestion, Mr. Justice Goodrich at page 136 in his opinion, stated:

> "The court is not inclined to view favorably so ambitious a program. It does not regard itself as a legislative committee nor a regulatory commission."
> "The object to be sought for the convenience of the parties as well as the court is a decree which will omit the necessary elements of suitable equitable relief and require a minimum of supervision by the Court."

Section 4 of the Sherman Act confers jurisdiction on District Courts "to prevent and restrain violations of this act". This jurisdiction is to be exercised according to the general principles which govern the granting of equitable relief. It confers no new or different power than those traditionally exercised by courts of equity. Section 262 of the Judicial Code has not enlarged those powers, merely granting the right to issue all writs not specifically provided for by statute, which may be necessary for the exercise of their respective jurisdictions and agreeable to the usages and principles of law.

DeBeers Consolidated Mines v. United States, 89 L. Ed. 1566, 325 U. S. 212.

Appalachian Coal Co. v. United States, 77 L. Ed. 825, 288 U. S. 344.

The function of a court of equity has traditionally been to enjoin, but has never been to prescribe methods for the conduct of business, which is solely within the province of the legislature. The court is not a legislative committee nor a regulatory commission.

U. S. v. Pullman, 50 Fed. Supp. 123.

An injunction against unlawful trade practices was contemplated by Congress when it passed the Sherman Act,—jurisdiction was given to the Federal Court to enjoin violations. There are liberal provisions made to enforce these anti-monopoly statutes. "But in no instance has it indicated an intention to interfere with ordinary commercial practices". Choosing theatres and arranging a selection of their customers may be considered the most essential factor in the maintenance of the highest standards of service.

When a decree has been handed down enjoining unfair trade practices the courts will assume that the defendants will comply with the decree. When it is shown to a court that there is not compliance with the decree, then further orders may issue.

United States v. Bausch & Lomb Optical Co., 321 U. S. 707.

United States v. Univis Lens Co., 41 Fed. Supp. 258, 316 U. S. 241.

In Federal Trade Commission v. Raymond Bros. Clark Co., 263 U. S. 565, 573, the court holds forth at length on the right of a manufacturer to deal with persons of his own choosing, backing up this statement with continuous citations. This policy is referred to with approval in later cases, such as the Bausch & Lomb case (supra).

It would appear that a decree framed to preclude the revival of unlawful practices had been enlarged beyond the old and fixed doctrine of the courts as expressed in the Hartford-Empire case (supra).

> "But, even so, the court may not create, as to the defendants, new duties, prescription of which is the function of Congress, or place the defendants, for the future, in a different class than other people as the government has suggested."
> Hartford Empire Co. v. United States, 323 U. S. 386 at 409.

In two instances decrees were noted which regulated business practices. Both these instances are easily distinguishable from the instant decree. In U. S. v. Crescent Amusement, 323 U. S. 173, the coercion of theatre owners was enjoined and further theatre purchases forbidden unless an affirmative showing could be made that there was no restraint on competition. This is truly a preventative measure against further infringements, and not the establishment of an entirely new system of business.

In the case of Associated Press v. United States, 326 U. S. 1, after enjoining the enforcement of offending by-laws, the court pointed out that the decree should not be considered as enjoining new by-laws which did not reinstate the practices which had been forbidden.

In formulating this drastic theory of compulsory licensing, it is interesting to note there is not one word, sentence or paragraph in the Statutory Court's mandates that requires an exhibitor or licensee to license the exhibition of any picture that is offered by a distributor. The entire compulsion is on the side of the licensor or seller, with no compulsion of any kind on the licensee or exhibitor or customer. It is respectfully submitted that the provisions of 7 and 8 violate every known principle of American freedom, and have no precedent either in law or fact which even tends to justify their inclusion in the decree of the United States District Court.

Subdivison 9 is equally objectionable for all of the reasons set forth as to 7 and 8.

The decree of the Statutory Court provides that each of the defendants is enjoined "* * * 4. From granting or enforcing any clearance against theatres in substantial competition with the theatre receiving the license for exhibition in excess of what is reasonably necessary to protect the licensee in the run granted. Whenever any clearance provision is attacked as not legal under the provisions of this decree, the burden shall be upon the distributor to sustain the legality thereof."

In the first sentence of this paragraph 4, the Statutory Court enjoins United Artists (and every other distributor) from granting or enforcing any clearance in excess of what is reasonably necessary to protect the licensee in the run granted. No provision is made to protect the licensor in the reward it expects from the license granted. Notwithstanding this failure to give the licensor what it is clearly entitled to under its copyright, the Court then shifts the burden of proof to the licensor or distributor to sustain the legality of any clearance it may grant to any exhibitor. This is contrary to every rule of procedure in American jurisprudence. See Richardson on Evidence, Sixth Edition, Section 171. When clearance is challenged, it should be the duty of the challenger to prove the illegality of the clearance. He who asserts a proposition should have the burden of establishing it. There are many statements of the rule. See Reliance Life Insurance Company v. Burgess, 112 F. (2d) 234; cert. denied, 311 U. S. 699, rehearing denied, 311 U. S. 730; Cowen Co. v. Houck Mfg. Co., 249 F. 285; Kohlsaat v. Parkersburg & Marietta Sand Co., 266 F. 283; Lilienthal's Tobacco v. United States, 97 U. S. 237; Cochran v. Pittsburgh & L. E. R. Company, 31 F. (2d) 769; Barnett v. Kunkel, 259 Fed. 394, 401.

It is clear that the Statutory Court, by its decree, is attempting to upset one of the most firmly imbedded principles of procedure. The provisions in the decree shifting the burden are clearly contrary to the principles of law as enumerated by the authorities.

POINT III

The Statutory Court erred

(a) In holding franchises illegal per se (R. 3696; subd. 5 of II of Decree);

(b) In directing United Artists to disregard the rights of its old customers (R. 3697), as well as the right to select its own customers;

(c) In enjoining clearance which was reasonably calculated to protect United Artists' revenue;

(d) In finding that United Artists acted in concert with distributor defendants in the formation of a uniform system of clearances;

(e) In finding that United Artists Corporation in any manner violated any of the provisions of the Sherman or Clayton Acts.

(a) At the time of the trial, United Artists Corporation had no franchises. (Government counsel intimated that United Artists had a franchise with Paramount which had expired in 1933, and did in fact offer it as an exhibit.) Notwithstanding the fact that it has no franchises, United Artists will not subscribe to the proposition that a franchise is illegal per se. Changing times and changing conditions might require United Artists Corporation to change its entire method of doing business and it may desire, separately and independently, to enter into franchise agreements with theatres.

What is a franchise? It is a contract with an exhibitor that extends over a period of more than one year, generally either two years or three years. Mr. Scully, testifying for Universal, in effect showed that his company made franchises for the most part with independent exhibitors—"727 with independent exhibitors as against 43 with affiliated exhibitors" (R. 1455-1484, Ex. U-2).

In all the patent cases, the exclusive right to use a patent has never been held invalid where the patent license did not exceed the life of the patent. On the contrary, the right to make exclusive grants for periods of years has been recognized in all licenses as a matter of law. Why is it illegal for a distributor, which controls less than five percent of the feature pictures made, to make a contract for two years rather than for one year?

In the cases involving the licensing of the right to vend and dispense Coca-Cola and other soft drinks, franchises for long periods of years have been held legal and enforceable. Even in instances where the franchise was indefinite as to period, it was held as non-cancellable by the licensor.

Coca-Cola Bottling v. Coca Cola, 269 Fed. 796.

No evidence was produced by the Government to show that any franchise put in evidence in any way tended to create a monopoly in any exhibitor licensee. The only inference that may be drawn from Scully's testimony is that franchises tended to stimulate and create competition. It insured independent exhibitors product for their theatres and provided the non-theatre owning distributor with assured outlets for its product. The finding of the Statutory Court was a gratuitous finding, wholly unsupported by the evidence, and contrary to all existing law, and an absolute restriction of free American trade and enterprise.

(b) United Artists has been deprived in this decree of the right to select its own customers, and must completely disregard the rights of its old customers.

A distributor of motion pictures may select the customer with whom it wishes to deal for any reason or no reason. The customer likewise has the concomitant and correlative right and may exercise its full economic power in connection with such choice.

This Court has explicitly and expressly recognized the right of a seller "to select his own customer" which the plaintiff now asks this Court to declare illegal. It has in so many words recognized the right of a buyer, in effect, to say to the seller "Either you sell to my competitor or you sell to me, but not both."

> "He may lawfully make a fixed rule of conduct not to buy from a producer or manufacturer who sells to consumers in competition with himself. Grenada Lumber Co. v. Miss., 217 U. S. 433, 440 * * *. Or he may stop dealing with a wholesaler who he thinks is acting unfairly in trying to undermine his trade. Eastern States Retail Lumber Dealers' Asso. v. United States, supra, p. 614; United States v. Colgate & Co., supra, p. 307. Likewise a wholesale dealer has the right to stop dealing with a manufacturer 'for reasons sufficient to himself.' And he may do so because he thinks such manufacturer is undermining his trade by selling either to a competing wholesaler or to a retailer competing with his own customers. Such other wholesaler or retailer has the reciprocal right to stop dealing with the manufacturer. This each may do, in the exercise of free competition, leaving it to the manufacturer to determine which customer, in the exercise of his own judgment, he desires to retain."

This is merely the identical principle applied to the converse state of facts in Federal Trade Commission v. Paramount, 57 F. (2d) 152, in which the Circuit Court of Appeals, Second Circuit, held that the presentation of the alternative of "all or nothing" imposed no restraint upon the freedom of choice.

"A distributor of films * * * has the right to select his own customers and to sell * * * or to refuse to sell at all to any particular person for reasons of his own." (Citing cases at p. 156.)

In Midwest Theatres Co. v. Co-operative Theatres of Michigan, Inc., Judge Picard said at page 221:

"On the contrary, our courts have held many times that the distributor may sell to whom he desires and that he may provide for clearance or even not to sell to any other competing exhibitor at all until after the clearance period."

The Sherman Act was not designed to reduce every competitor to equality. The purpose of the Sherman Act is simply to eliminate interstate "restraints of trade" and nothing more.

> "The mere fact that a given method of competition makes it difficult for competitors to do business successfully is not of itself sufficient to brand the method of competition as unlawful and unfair. Fed. Trade Comm. v. Curtis Pub. Co., 260 U. S. 568, 43 S. Ct. 210, 213, 67 L. Ed. 408; Fed. Trade Comm. v. Sinclair Refining Co., 261 U. S. 463, 43 S. Ct. 450, 67 L. Ed. 746. From the tables referred to above, it is apparent that the respondent did not have a monopoly in the film industry" (Fed. Trade Comm. v. Paramount, supra, at p. 157).
> "The national will has not declared against elimination of competitors when they fail from their inherent industrial weakness" (U. S. v. Corn Products, etc., 234 Fed. at 1015).

In Great Atlantic & Pacific Tea Co. v. Cream of Wheat, 227 Fed. 46 (C. C. A. 2nd, 1913), the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit said at page 49:

> "Before the Sherman Act it was the law that a trader might reject the offer of a proposing buyer, for any reason that appealed to him; it might be because he did not like the other's business methods, or because he had some personal difference with him, political, racial, or social. That was purely his own affair, with which nobody else had any concern. Neither the Sherman Act nor any decision of the Supreme Court construing the same, nor the Clayton Act, has changed the law in this particular. We have not yet reached the stage where the selection of a trader's customers is made for him by the government." (Italics ours.)

And that same court in Green v. Victor Talking Machine Co., 24 F. (2d) 378 (C. C. A. 2nd, 1928), reaffirmed this doctrine in the following language at page 382:

> "But no case has decided, so far as we are aware, that the refusal of one individual to deal with another requires justification. A private trader is privileged to exercise his own pleasure as to parties with whom he will deal. Fed. Trade Comm. v. Raymond Co., 263 U. S. 565, 573. * * * Great Atlantic & Pac. Tea Co. v. Cream of Wheat Co. (D. C.), 224 F. 566, 574, aff'd 227 F. 46, 48 (C. C. A. 2). To make his motive in exercising this privilege the subject of judicial inquiry would be a step beyond what the courts have yet done, or what we think they can wisely do in the present stage of our economic order."

In Rolsky v. Fox Widwest Theatres, Inc. (W. D. Mo., 1936), C. C. H. Fed. Trade Reg. Serv., p. 6442 (1936), the Court said:

> "Now, if we have, for example, three distributors, 'A', 'B' and 'C', and two exhibitors, 'X' and 'Y', and the business of 'X' is ten times as valuable to the distributors, 'A', 'B' and 'C', as the business of 'Y', and if 'X' demands of 'A', 'B' and 'C' a certain type of contract different from that which 'Y' demands, and if the type of contract which 'X' demands is the type which generally is used, and which generally is looked upon by distributors as more advantageous than the type that 'Y' demands, if, with all of those facts and circumstances, 'A', 'B' and 'C' do enter into contracts with exhibitors 'X' and 'Y' of the type which 'X' demands, rather than of the type which 'Y' demands, the explanation of that fact, the sensible explanation of it, the reasonable explanation, the plausible explanation of it that they have done so because the more important customer has demanded it of each of them, because it is more advantageous to them, from a pecuniary standpoint, rather than that they have entered into an agreement with each other that they will enter into that type of contract with exhibitor customers. The explanation which is consistent with innocence and with that which is lawful is so much more reasonable than the explanation which imputes illegality to the producers, that apart from any presumption in favor of lawful conduct, the first explanation should be accepted. * * *"

"3. During the argument of the case, what I think was a new theory was advanced by learned counsel for the plaintiffs. I do not know that it was a theory that was new in his mind just at the time it was advanced by him. I do not think it was present in his mind when the bill was drawn. Certainly it is not clearly presented by the allegations contained in the bill, although they may be sufficient to embrace it. That new theory is this: Even if no concert of action has been proved against the distributor defendants, no conspiracy, nevertheless, it has been proved that each of the distributor defendants entered into a contract with the defendant, Fox Midwest Theatres, Inc., by which that defendant was given a priority of run as to pictures sold it over some, at least, of the plaintiff exhibitors. The theory is that a contract of that character violates the Sherman Anti-Trust Statute, provided it has the effect of restraining interstate commerce. I do not think the theory is sound.

"The evidence in the case is that moving picture films are copyrighted. When a given distributor sells or licenses a given picture to a given exhibitor it does that by virtue of the ownership of the copyright and of the rights conferred by law on him who owns a copyright. I think there cannot be any doubt whatever but that a distributor of motion pictures, owning a copyright upon a given picture may sell to an exhibitor in a given area the exclusive right to exhibit that picture, either for a short period or for a long period, provided it is not longer than the life of the copyright, without regard to whether that exhibitor is one who charges the same or a different admission price from that which is charged by another exhibitor or other exhibitors in the same area."

The selection of one buyer and the exclusion of another, even though it severely handicaps the excluded buyer in his competitive position, does not make such selection a violation of the Sherman Act.

In Arthur v. Kraft-Phenix, etc. (supra) plaintiff alleged that defendant terminated its position as distributor of Kraft-Phenix products, because it refused to obey the dictates of the defendant and buy out a competitor distributor. But this did not save the complaint from dismissal.

In Green v. Victor, etc. (supra) plaintiff alleged that the defendant ceased to do business with her corporation in order to coerce her into selling out her stock.

In the Raymond case (supra) the defendant was alleged to have committed acts and practices, the purpose and effect of which was to cut off the supplies purchased by a competitor from the T. A. Snider Preserve Company and thereby stifle and prevent competition of such competitor and to interfere with the right of the competitor to deal freely with the Snider Company. The Raymond Company used its buying power by threatening to withdraw its trade from the Snider Company in order to coerce the Snider Company into refraining from selling Snider Company products to a competitor. "In threatening to withdraw its trade from the Snider Company" the Raymond Company "exercised its lawful right" (p. 574). We assume that the Snider Company in succumbing or submitting to the "buying power" of the Raymond Company did not violate the Sherman Act.

In Locker v. American Tobacco Co. (supra) the complainant complained because the defendant tobacco companies had placed all their jobbing business for New York City with one jobber, thereby excluding plaintiff from his former market and working apparently irreparable harm to him. The Circuit Court of Appeals (2nd Cir.) found nothing illegal about this, declaring at page 450:

> "The laws of trade are not wholly altruistic, they may often be hard and selfish, but it is no part of the duty of courts to attempt to enforce the precepts of the decalogue. In the struggles engendered by fierce competition, losses must occur and injustice may be done, but this is frequently inevitable and cannot be prevented so long as the parties keep within the law."

Examples from the above cited cases could be multplied to demonstrate that the right to exclude is not diminished because the excluded party is thereby injured. This may be a consequence of the legal use of a legal right.

So long as we still have private property, and so long as the motion picture industry is not a public utility required by law to sell to everyone through a Public Service Commission which will grade pictures and fix prices, select dates, allocate preferred playing time, establish clearances, etc., etc., etc., it is the right of United Artists, acting separately and independently, to sell its pictures to the customer it considers will return to it the largest revenue.

(c) The right of United Artists Corporation to grant clearance in an exhibition agreement is legal.

Westway Theatres, Inc. v. 20th Century Fox, 30 Fed. Supp. 830, aff'd 113 Fed. (2d) 932.

Gary Theatres Co. v. Columbia, 120 Fed. (2d) 891.

Peoples' Theatre Co. v. Minneapolis Film Board of Trade, U. S. District Court, Minnesota, not officially reported.

Shubert v. Metro, U. S. District Court, Minnesota, not officially reported.

The statutory court in particular recognized this principle, but in Section 4 of II of the decree it whittled this right to such a degree that the distributor cannot grant such clearance as the distributor needed for the protection of the distributor's revenue, but limits the grant to such as will reasonably protect the exhibitor. This is expressly contrary to the finding of this Court in Interstate v. United States (supra). The copyright owner, producer or distributor is entitled to place the necessary restrictions to protect its reward under the Interstate case, and not limited to what the exhibitor needs for its reward. This argument has been fully developed heretofore in the brief in discussing the other assignments of error.

POINT IV

The decree of the Statutory Court instead of correcting alleged wrongs will ultimately destroy this industry.

The Statutory Court refused the Government's prayer that the major defendants be required to divest themselves of their theatres which, as heretofore pointed out, was the principal demand of the Government in its Bill of Complaint and on the trial.

Since this decree was entered, the eight distributing defendants have been deluged with a flood of litigation by exhibitors claiming to have been aggrieved because (a) the distributors had previously inserted minimum admission prices in their license contracts, or (b) had licensed exhibition rights on specific runs or availabilities, or (c) had granted clearances between runs, or (d) had made franchise agreements, or (e) had made formula deals, or (f) had recognized the rights of old customers, or (g) had failed to recognize the rights of old customers.

A series of lawsuits by theatre operators has been started based entirely on these alleged violations of law.

In those lawsuits, through depositions, the plaintiffs are endeavoring to establish the above practices with the hope that upon trial they may establish a prima facie case for treble damages by showing the decree of the Statutory Court as per the provisions of Section 16 of the Clayton Act, plus some evidence of the local situations.

The flood gates are open. Under this decree the entire production and distribution side of the motion picture industry is doomed to destruction, as no industry can survive the flood of damage suits that theatre operators have begun and are bound to institute.

This decree to the Government's contention, instead of solving the problems of the industry, may well be the instrument to destroy the entire economic structure of the industry, an industry, which the record shows, has been built from the cheap nickelodeon to a magnificent achievement, where every city and town has its own Radio City Music Hall, or its small edition thereof, offering worthwhile entertainment weekly to over eighty million theatregoers in the United States alone.

The Statutory Court and these litigating exhibitors overlook the fact that no theatre can survive unless it has motion pictures to exhibit. If this decree remains nothing can save the distribution business.

The Government did not call a single witness to establish that any theatre owner suffered in any degree as a result of either block selling, runs, availabilities, clearances, minimum admission prices, franchises, formula deals, or any of the distribution trade practices condemned by the Statutory Court in Section II of the decree.

The Government produced charts, records, and the accountants who prepared the charts, as a substitute for exhibitors because exhibitors would substantiate the testimony of the distributors that these uniformities and these trade practices grew out of many years of competition rather than out of combination or conspiracy.

The Government substituted inferences placed upon inferences instead of factual testimony.

The Government sought to confuse the Statutory Court, and did actually succeed in confusing the Court, that great privileges and priorities were given to so-called affiliated exhibitors while different treatment was afforded the so-called independent exhibitors.

The undisputed evidence shows that United Artists dealt with the independents in the same manner in which it dealt with affiliates. The same form of contract was generally used. The same rights were granted, both affiliate and independent alike, as to run, clearances, availability, admission prices and otherwise.

Nothing was shown that required the Statutory Court to strike down the manner and method of doing business and to substitute its own formula.

The evidence disclosed that during the period of the suit all theatres enjoyed the greatest prosperity known to the amusement business (see p. 1180, R.).

The evidence showed that every branch of the public had an opportunity to see pictures, and the best pictures, at an admission price suitable to every pocketbook.

Pictures under the run, clearance and availability system, are shown at the higher admission prices in the Radio City Music Hall and then, in exactly the same manner, all the way down to the last run theatre in the City of New York,—and in like manner in every other city,—with admission prices growing progressively lower as the picture travelled from theatre to theatre, so that the individual with the smallest pocketbook may see the same picture in the same manner as when it was first exhibited at the high admission prices in the Radio City Music Hall.

In like manner, as the runs progress the license fees to the distributor progressively decrease.

The Government introduced contracts that showed a theatre paying as low as $10 for the right to exhibit a particular picture, while a theatre in the same community, for the first run, paid thousands of dollars.

Runs, clearances and availability are not new, novel or original in the motion picture business. They are a fundamental part of all show business.

In the legitimate theatre, Ziegfeld Follies would play in the New Amsterdam Theatre in New York City and in no other theatre in that city. Because of the tremendous cost of movement, it might later play Boston, Philadelphia, Chicago, Detroit, Cleveland and a few other large cities. The public, if it wished to see Mr. Ziegfeld's show, would have to journey to these particular cities.

A legitimate play of a dramatic nature, such as "Turn To The Right" or "Lightnin' ", would play in one theatre in New York City. Because of the small size of the dramatic offering, touring companies might be organized and four or five companies of "Turn To The Right" or "Lightnin' " might tour the whole United States, but would play in only one theatre in each city.

These tours might last two or three years; then the play would become available for stock and stock companies could rent the plays on a royalty basis. But even then these stock companies only operated in a limited number of towns and cities and generally for a short season.

Vaudeville of yesterday and burlesque of yesterday used the run and clearance system with the same exclusivity as the legitimate theatre.

The name of B. F. Keith was a household word in the eastern half of the United States in the days of "big time" vaudeville. Outside of New York City there was only one "big time" B. F. Keith vaudeville theatre in a city, and then only in the larger and more important cities. This show house would feature an orchestra, nine or ten acts of big time vaudeville and a newsreel. Acts played in this type of theatre would not be booked elsewhere in that city or community during that particular season. There were so-called vaudeville houses of lesser importance in each of the cities and these theatres featured acts which did not headline on the "big time".

In burlesque we had the Columbia Wheel. One theatre in each city played each of these shows one week during their forty-week season.

The motion picture distributors, following the pattern of show business and enlarging upon it, have made it possible for every branch of the public in every city boasting more than one theatre, by a system of multiple runs to see every picture produced and released for exhibition in the United States.

Every small town or hamlet that has any kind of a motion picture theatre or school or hall equipped to show motion pictures, has the opportunity to see "Gone With The Wind", "Henry The Fifth", "Abbott & Costello", or any other form of motion picture entertainment.

There is no need to journey to Buffalo or Cleveland to see "Ziegfeld Follies" in motion pictures, as it may be seen in Cambridge, Ohio, or Attica, New York, in exactly the same technicolor as when it was exhibited in the largest and best theatre in those towns.

In the present case the Court arrived at its conclusion of conspiracy and that the trade practices which it condemned were unlawful on examination only of the practices themselves, holding them illegal on their face in disregard of testimony as to their actual purpose and with no proof of their effect. The result is that certain practices have been held per se unlawful, and from the mere similarity of contractual provisions, caused, as the uncontradicted testimony of those who made the contract showed, by the inevitable forces of competition which compels similarity, the Court below has inferred that the defendants have combined and conspired in violation of the Sherman Act. The serious consequences to the defendants, to the industry and the public of such a judgment is apparent.

These countless treble damage suits have been instituted by exhibitors who now feel that the decree gives them opportunity for a windfall. The amounts demanded in these suits already instituted aggregate many millions of dollars damage, a staggering amount for eight members of an industry (and especially United Artists), already hard pressed because of increasing trade barriers and confiscatory taxation threatening to bar their products from the markets of the world. Thus it is the duty of this Court to hold on this record that no illegality of the trade practices and unlawful conspiracy have been established.

The foregoing is not intended as a plea to permit any defendant to escape the penalty prescribed by Congress for unlawful conduct, but rather to point out that when the consequences of a holding of conspiracy and that a practice or contract is unlawful are so serious and far reaching, the Courts should be particularly zealous to discover the actual facts before passing judgment and doubly reluctant to declare them unlawful without proof as to their real purpose and effect, and that where the lower Court has made such decree without such an inquiry, this Court should not permit it to stand as prima facie evidence of illegality.

CONCLUSION

It is respectfully submitted that the decree of the Statutory Court as to the United Artists Corporation should be reversed and that a decree of dismissal should be entered as to the appellant United Artists Corporation.

Respectfully submitted,

EDWARD C. RAFTERY,
ARTHUR F. DRISCOLL,
GEORGE A. RAFTERY, Counsel.

STATEMENT AS TO JURISDICTION OF THE SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES TO REVIEW THE JUDGMENT OR DECREE HEREIN

In compliance with Rule 12 of the Supreme Court of the United States, as amended, Universal Pictures Company, Inc., (sued herein as Universal Corporation and Universal Pictures Company Inc.), Universal Film Exchanges Inc., and Big U Film Exchange Inc., defendants-appellants herein, submit herewith their statement particularly disclosing the basis upon which the Supreme Court has jurisdiction on appeal to review the final judgment and decree of the District Court of the United States for the Southern District of New York, specially constituted under Title 15, Section 28 of the United States Code, entered in this cause on the 31st day of December, 1946, on which day the said District Court also filed its findings of fact and conclusions of law.

The defendants-appellants filed timely motions for substantial amendment of the Court's' findings, conclusions and judgment or decree. The Court denied these motions on the 3rd day of February, 1947. A petition for appeal is presented to the District Court herewith.

Nature of the Case, Rulings of the Court, and Substantial Questions Involved

This was a proceeding in equity brought by the United States of America under Section 4 of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act to enjoin the defendants from contracting, combining and conspiring to restrain interstate commerce in motion pictures, and from monopolizing, attempting to monopolize and combining and conspiring to monopolize such interstate commerce, in violation of Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act. Venue was laid in the Southern District of New York.

The original petition was filed on July 20, 1938. Defendants answered the petition and denied the material allegations thereof. The case first came on for trial on June 1, 1940. Before any testimony was taken, negotiations were begun between the Government and the so-called "major defendants" for the disposition of the cause by Consent Decree. An amended and supplemental complaint was filed on November 14, 1940, and the defendants filed answers denying material allegations thereof. On November 20, 1940, a Consent Decree was entered into between the Government and the "major defendants", pursuant to which they subjected their businesses to regulation as agreed, in respect of certain trade practices in the licensing of motion pictures, and consented to the establishment of an arbitration system to enforce the provisions of the Decree.

Dissatisfied with the operation of the Consent Decree, the Government moved on March 5, 1945, to set the case for trial and filed an application pursuant to the Expediting Act, 15 U. S. C. Sec. 28, for the appointment of a special three-judge Court to hear and determine the issues raised by the amended and supplemental complaint and the answers thereto. This Court was duly constituted with Judges Augustus N. Hand, Circuit Judge, and Henry W. Goddard and John Bright, District Judges, and the trial proceeded before the Court as so constituted, commencing on the 8th day of October, 1945, and concluding on November 20, 1945, except for argument. The Government introduced over 400 exhibits, but called no witnesses whatever. Several thousand pages of testimony were taken from witnesses called by the defendants, who also offered a considerable number of exhibits. The case was argued the middle of January, 1946, and the Court rendered its opinion on June 11, 1946. On October 20th and 21st, 1946, it heard argument as to the form of its finding of fact, conclusions of law and judgment or decree. On December 31, 1946, it filed its finding of fact and conclusions of law and entered its judgment or decree with supplemental opinion. Copies of the opinion and supplemental opinion are annexed hereto as Exhibits A and B. Timely motions to amend made by all of the defendants were denied on February 3, 1947, except that the effective dates of certain provisions of the decree were extended.

The plaintiff requested injunctive relief against the violations charged, and prayed that the five major producer-distributors be required to divest themselves of their theatres which had allegedly been employed to monopolize interstate commerce. As it was conceded by the plaintiff at the trial that there was active competition in the production of motion pictures, the charges in respect thereto were formally abandoned by the plaintiff and dismissed by the Court in its decree.

Those defendants, who were referred to by the Government as the "major defendants" or the "big five", were five integrated businesses, engaged in all three phases of the motion picture industry, to wit, the production of motion pictures (mainly in the State of California), the distribution thereof (i.e., the licensing under copyright to an exhibitor of the intangible exhibition rights to a picture accompanied by a temporary bailment of a positive print of the negative film) among some 18,000 theatres located throughout the United States, and the exhibition of said motion pictures to the public in return for the payment of an admission charge.

The "major defendants" (hereinafter sometimes referred to as Paramount, Loew's, RKO, Warner's and Fox) were: Paramount Pictures Inc. and a subsidiary, Loew's Inc., Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation and its subsidiaries, Warner Bros. Pictures Inc. and its subsidiaries, and Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation and its subsidiaries. The foregoing defendants are sometimes referred to as the integrated defendants, or the producer-distributor-exhibitor defendants, or the producer-exhibitor defendants.

In addition to the "major defendants" the Government named as defendants, Columbia Pictures Corporation and its subsidiaries (hereinafter sometimes called Columbia), Universal Corporation and its subsidiaries (hereinafter sometimes called Universal) and United Artists Corporation (hereinafter sometimes called United Artists). None of these companies possessed any theatres, the operations of Columbia and Universal being confined to the production and distribution of motion pictures, and the operations of United Artists being confined to the distribution thereof. These defendants were referred to by the Government as the "little three".

Producer-distributors other than the defendants were referred to by the Government as "independents", and the largest of these are Monogram Pictures Corporation, Republic Pictures Corporation and Producers Releasing Corporation.

Motion pictures are classified into features, short subjects and news reels. A feature is a motion picture which is over 4,000 feet in length. The case was mainly concerned with the production, distribution and exhibition of features, by all odds the most important part of the business.

Each of the defendant-distributors maintains so-called exchanges suitably located throughout the United States, in order to solicit license agreements for the exhibition of its pictures in theatres situated throughout the territory served by the exchange, and for the physical distribution of positive prints throughout this territory.

The 18,000 motion picture theatres in the country are divided into "affiliated theatres" (which are theatres owned, controlled or managed by a major distributor, or in the ownership, control or management of which a major distributor has a financial interest) and unaffiliated theatres. These unaffiliated theatres are in turn divided into independent circuit theatres and independent theatres. A circuit theatre is a theatre which is a member of a theatre chain, which is defined in the amended and supplemental complaint (hereinafter sometimes called the complaint), upon which the case was tried, as "a group of more than five theatres owned, controlled or managed by the same person, partnership or corporation; or a group of more than five theatres which combine with each other, through a common agent, in licensing film". Any theatre which is not a "circuit theatre" or an "affiliated theatre" is defined in the complaint as an "independent theatre".

Motion picture theatres are also classified in accordance with the run upon which, i.e., the order in which, they are licensed to show pictures which have been released. First-run theatres are those which are given the first opportunity, after release, to exhibit a motion picture; second-run theatres are those which receive the second opportunity to exhibit the released picture; and third-run theatres are those which receive the third opportunity to exhibit the released picture. All theatres subsequent to the first-run are known as subsequent-run theatres. Of the first-run theatres, the so-called "metropolitan" theatres in the larger cities are, of course, much the most important.

A motion picture season is the period from September 1st of one year to August 31st of the next.

Instead of licensing their product picture by picture and theatre by theatre, wholesale licensing by distributors has been a very general practice in the industry, not only because it is advantageous to the distributor, but also because it is advantageous to the exhibitor. Such selling is not only economical, but permits both buyer and seller to know where they stand at the earliest possible time, and to plan accordingly. The seller knows what income he can reasonably count on, and the buyer knows that he has a commitment for a supply of pictures to last him a season or more. Thus licenses were entered into with all types of exhibitors, including the smallest, for an entire season's product of features, and distributors often entered into franchises with exhibitors, assuring such exhibitors of their entire output of pictures for a number of years. Such franchises were made with all types of exhibitors. They were of great value to independent theatres in their efforts to compete with large theatre chains. Only when they were made with large theatre chains, and contained provisions considered to be unreasonably restrictive of small exhibitors, did the complaint allege that they were illegal. In dealing with theatre circuits, or a number of theatres, so-called master contracts or "blanket deals" were made covering all of the theatres in one agreement. Formula deals were also made with theatre circuits, and these measured the film rental by a certain percentage of the national gross receipts of the particular feature licensed.

Although the defendant-distributors concededly granted "considerable" rejection rights to exhibitors when licensing wholesale, the Decree required them to grant a specified 20% in every case, permitting no flexibility whatever to accord with differing circumstances.

The number of feature motion pictures produced and distributed each motion picture season is limited. Excluding so-called "Westerns" (which are low-cost wild-west adventure pictures), there were 335 feature pictures distributed during the 1943/44 season, which was the season preceding the trial. Of these Fox released 33, Loew's 33, Paramount 31, RKO 38, Warner 19, Columbia 41, United Artists 16, Universal 49, Republic 29, Monogram 26 and Producers Releasing Corporation 20. The cost of producing a feature picture is very large, and has greatly increased in recent years, ranging from hundreds of thousands of dollars to millions.

Excluding theatres jointly owned by a major defendant with another major defendant or with an independent (totaling 1,501 theatres), the number of theatres comprised in the theatre chains of the five major defendants in the year 1945 were as follows: Paramount 1,395, Warner 501, Loew's 135, Fox 636 and RKO 109. These defendants, taken together, controlled nearly three-fourths of the metropolitan first-run theatres, and their holdings were mainly in first-run theatres. There were several large independent circuits, none of which, however, was as important as the least important of the affiliated circuits.

Each of the "big five" was several times as large as Universal, which possessed no theatres.

The "big five", considered collectively, receive a lion's share of the film rental paid in the United States, and they distribute a very high proportion of the pictures which produce the largest receipts at the box office.

The burden of the Government's complaint, and that part of it upon which it laid the greatest stress in evidence and argument, was that the competition of independent exhibitors had been suppressed by a combination and conspiracy having the objective of dominating the exhibition business, the dominant members of which were the producer-distributor-exhibitors. It claimed that the major defendants, who as a group produced and distributed a very high proportion of the best-drawing pictures, could, as exhibitors, successfully command each other's pictures, and those of other distributors, by reason of the great buying-power of their large theatre chains, and that through them they had dominated the first-run theatre situation, particularly the metropolitan first-runs, which in turn dominated the subsequent-run theatres in the respective competitive areas.

The Government further alleged that abuse of the great buying-power which this Court has found is inherent in large circuits of theatres (as exemplified in U. S. v. Crescent Amusement Co., 323 U. S. 173 in the case of an independent circuit) was markedly accentuated in the case of affiliated circuits to which the feature pictures of their parent producer-distributors were permanently assured, in that the factor of affiliation introduced into film-licensing negotiations an inducement to favor affiliated theatres at the expense of unaffiliated theatres. It thus alleged (in its amended and supplemental complaint) that a "producer-exhibitor-defendant, in negotiating for the licensing of films released by it for exhibition in theatres owned and controlled by another producer-exhibitor-defendant must take into consideration the terms demanded by the other producer-exhibitor in licensing its films for exhibition in theatres owned or controlled by such first producer-exhibitor. The granting of certain terms and privileges with respect to the exhibition of one producer-exhibitor-defendant's films in another producer-exhibitor-defendant's circuit is necessarily conditioned upon the granting of similar terms and privileges by the latter with respect to the exhibition of its films in the circuit of the former".

The Government further alleged that, in consequence of their power and pre-eminence in the production, distribution and exhibition fields, the major defendants, acting in concert with each other and with the minor defendants, had been able to fix and stabilize the statuses, not only of their own motion-picture theatres, but of those of all other motion picture theatres in the same competitive areas, in respect of run to be enjoyed, admission prices to be charged, time intervals (clearances) between runs, and other less important matters, to the great detriment of independent exhibitors, who were not in a position, by reason of their small buying power, to obtain favorable runs upon which the higher admission prices could be charged, or favorable clearance as against subsequent runs, or other favorable provisions in their licensing contracts.

In support of their contentions the Government relied upon (1) the practice generally followed by motion-picture theatres of charging the same admission price for the pictures of all distributors, and the practice followed by distributors of requiring the maintenance during the run of a licensed feature of the currently-charged admission price, resulting in uniformity in the minimum admission prices specified in the licenses of all distributors; and (2) the alleged fact that over the years those motion-picture theatres which had become established in their enjoyment of particular prior runs, and as to the extent of the time interval (clearance) to follow such runs before the next showing of the picture, had usually been able to eventually obtain such runs and clearance from all or nearly all distributors in particular situations.

On the other hand Universal contended (1) that a distributor, licensing under copyright, without passing title to any tangible object, might properly obtain from the licensee a covenant against change in position in respect of admission price, to the detriment of the licensor, during the run of the copyrighted picture; (2) that similarity between the minimum admission prices specified in its license agreements and those specified by other defendant-distributors proved nothing more than that all followed the legal practice of obtaining covenants against change in position in respect of admission price during the run, to the detriment of the licensor; (3) that the run to be enjoyed by a motion-picture theatre, and the clearance to follow that run, were not matters upon which a non-theatre-owning defendant, distributing an insignificant proportion of the best-drawing pictures, could have any substantial influence, such matters being determined, inter alia, by the licensed theatre's position relative to competing theatres in respect of (a) the admission price charged, (b) the nature and character of the theatre, its location and entertainment policy, and (c) its film-rental paying ability; (4) that motion-picture theatres, for practical operating reasons, and in view of their policy of charging the same admission prices, irrespective of whose pictures are being shown, and of what they cost, desire the same run and the same clearance from all distributors serving them; and (5) that when other distributors have accorded a prior run and a certain amount of clearance, to a particular theatre, Universal cannot refuse to do as well, if it is to maintain its competitive position.

The District Court found, on the basis of such similarities in action among the defendants, that the major defendants had fixed and stabilized runs, clearances and admission prices, pursuant to combination and conspiracy, as had been charged, and that the minor defendants, possessing no theatres and distributing but a small proportion of the best-drawing pictures, had participated in such combination and conspiracy. It attributed this illegal condition, however, to collective control by the defendant distributors, including the non-theatre-owning distributors, of most of the best-drawing pictures, and their practices in licensing the same, and not at all to restrictions imposed through the buying-power of the affiliated theatre chains, as condemned by this Court in the case of a much smaller independent circuit (U. S. v. Crescent Amusement Co., 323 U. S. 173).

Universal possessed no theatre circuit with which to influence exhibition conditions. The proportion of the best-drawing pictures which it distributed was far less than its relative size might suggest, and far too small to give it any substantial voice, by reason of its position as a distributor, in exhibition conditions, save in such exceptional situations as those in which it might be able to encourage the launching of new competitive enterprises, and in which it would obtain show-windows for its pictures through the granting of franchises.

At the end of its case and at the end of the whole case Universal moved to dismiss the Petition and Amended and Supplemental Complaint.

Thus whether or not there was a conspiracy among the theatre-owning defendants, such as the Government charges, the similarity of Universal's action, in respect of minimum admission prices, runs and clearances specified in its licenses, to that of the other defendant distributors, to the extent that it was similar, was not a proper basis upon which to hold it. The District Court specifically held that "independent distributors" were "obliged to conform" to a "fixed scale of clearances, runs and admission prices" in order "to get their pictures shown upon satisfactory runs". Yet Republic Pictures Corporation, one of these "independent distributors", is larger relative to Universal than Universal is relative to any of the "big five".

Substantial questions are thus presented which turn upon the proper inferences to be drawn from similar action under the particular circumstances and upon the distinction between dealing with members of a conspiracy, if one in fact existed, and joining "mind and hand" with them. Cement Manufacturers' Protective Association v. U. S., 268 U. S. 588, 605-6; U. S. v. U. S. Steel Corporation, 251 U. S. 417, 447-9; U. S. v. International Harvester Co., 274 U. S. 693, 708-9; U. S. v. American Can Co., 230 Fed. 859, 902 (D. Md., 1916); U. S. v. Standard Oil Co. of N. J., 47 F. (2nd) 288 (E. D. Mo., 1931); Anderson v. Shipowners' Association, 27 F. (2nd) 163 (N. D. Col., 1928), aff'd 31 F. (2nd) 539 (C. C. A. 9th, 1929), cert. den. 279 U. S. 864; Nissen v. Andres, et al., 63 Pac (2nd) 47 (Okla. 1936); Commonwealth v. Hatfield Coal Co., 193 Ky. 229; U. S. v. Falcone, 311 U. S. 205; Direct Sales Co. v. U. S., 319 U. S. 703.

The second branch of the Government's case against Universal consisted of the claim that its licensing contracts with exhibitors (whether or not they were affiliated with major defendants, were circuit theatres, or were independent theatres) were in violation of the Sherman Act in various respects.

In this connection the District Court concluded that the Universal defendants violated Section 1 of the Sherman Act (Conclusion of Law, No. 8) by "agreeing individually with their respective licensees to grant discriminatory license privileges to theatres affiliated with other defendants and with large circuits". In other words, even though Universal was without power to resist the demands of affiliated and large independent circuits with great buying power for favorable license terms, it was to be considered guilty of violating the Sherman Act merely by reason of the fact that it may have granted more favorable terms in certain respects (but not necessarily overall) to one licensee then to another. Such a conclusion, we submit, wrongly applies the principles of the Robinson-Patman Act, to a situation completely without its scope, and presents a substantial question.

Licensing contracts generally required that the admission prices currently being charged by the exhibitors licensed not be reduced during the run of the licensed picture. In the licensing for exhibition of a motion picture under copyright, no title passes to the positive print, which is temporarily bailed to the exhibitor in order that he may exercise the intangible rights under copyright which have been licensed to him. Upon the conclusion of the run, the positive print is returned to the distributor or shipped at his direction to another exhibitor. The most important film-licensing contracts measure the film rentals by a percentage of the gross receipts, sometimes with a minimum guarantee. Flat rental fees bear a close relationship to expected gross receipts. If the exhibitor were free to lower his current admission price, after agreeing to pay a film rental based upon gross receipts, or closely related thereto, the reasonable expectation of reward held by the licensor would be defeated.

The licensor does not prescribe any maximum admission price, and the exhibitor, if he shows other pictures or furnishes other entertainment in addition to the feature licensed, may charge what he pleases therefor.

This situation, it is submitted, presents novel and substantial questions concerning the right to specify prices in connection with copyright licenses when no title to any physical article passes. In U. S. v. General Electric Co., 272 U. S. 476, at p. 488, and Bement v. National Harrow Co., 16 U. S. 70, licenses to make and vend patented articles at fixed prices were upheld as legal, in view of the continuing interest of the licensor in not having his licensees compete against him, despite the fact that the title to the articles sold was at all times in the licensee. It is believed that the continuing interest of a copyright owner entitle him to insist upon a covenant against reduction in a current admission price, upon the faith of which he has agreed to accept a specified film rental, no right of the licensee to sell a tangible article owned by him at his own price being involved.

The legality of completely exclusive licenses under copyright, as of the common-place exclusive license under a patent, would not seem to be open to doubt (Interstate Circuit v. U. S., 306 U. S. 208, at pp. 227-8). In the motion picture industry, however, distributors have not granted, and exhibitors have not insisted upon, completely exclusive licenses. Prior runs, with clearances between runs, have sufficed to meet the needs of both distributors and exhibitors. This custom seems to have suggested to subsequent-run exhibitors the idea that they are entitled to receive a picture at some "reasonable" time after the preceding run, whereas the true principle must be, as in the case of a patent, that such restrictions as are imposed are for the benefit of the licensor, and are valid if reasonably related to the reward he is entitled to secure under his legal monopoly. General Electric Co. v. U. S., 272 U. S. 475; General Talking Pictures Corp. v. U. S., 305 U. S. 124, 127.

The District Court recognized that clearance might be granted to an extent reasonably necessary to protect the licensee's run, but either overlooked the fact that greater clearance might sometimes subserve the licensor's legitimate interests (as with an exclusive license), or diminished the licensor's rights as a species of punishment, which is inadmissible. Hartford-Empire Co. v. U. S., 323 U. S. 386. It placed upon Universal the impossible and illegal burden of sustaining the reasonableness, from the standpoint of the exhibitor's interests, not the public's or its own, of all clearances granted, without prescribing any adequate standards for the determination of what would be reasonable. Yet under the competitive bidding system prescribed by the Court the exhibitor is the one who fixes the clearance. Decree, II 8(c).

Universal believes that the District Court thus seriously erred in encroaching upon its legal rights under its copyright monopolies to grant exclusive licenses, with any restriction normally and reasonably related to the reward to which its copyrights entitled it.

At the same time that the District Court permitted the protection of the licensee's run by clearance, it held illegal the specification by the licensors of differentials in minimum admission prices, calculated to encourage as many patrons as possible to see their pictures first-run at the highest admission prices. Yet both license provisions are patently directed to the same end. Universal contends that such action is legal, and does not violate either Section 1 or 2 of the Sherman Act.

Although approving clearance as a necessary institution, the District Court enjoined each distributor from agreeing with exhibitors "to maintain a system of clearances". (Emphasis ours). Since in the ordinary course of business a distributor granting clearances would necessarily grant them to many exhibitors, and since in the case of minimum admission prices the Court had clearly regarded such dealings as an illegal system of fixed prices, petitioners submit that a substantial question is involved as to the propriety of this injunction, and as to its validity in view of its vagueness.

Franchises, in which a distributor commits its pictures for periods longer than one year to an exhibitor, are considerably less restrictive than the ordinary exclusive agency arrangement, which is one of the most common methods of doing business, and as a result of the law having been settled by numerous authoritative cases, obtains throughout all industry. The exclusive feature in a franchise is limited to the particular run on which the exhibitor operates, and subsequent run exhibitors can thereafter obtain the pictures. Of Universal's nearly 800 franchises, less than 1% are for longer than three years, and all but 43 are with independent exhibitors.

If franchises were availed of by the producer-exhibitor defendants as a means to effectuate a combination and conspiracy, the Decree may, of course, properly suppress such franchises, whether or not granted by innocent or participating parties. It may, indeed, properly go further and prohibit the accepting of such franchises in the future by such defendants, pending the dissipation of the effects of the assumed conspiracy. The District Court, however, broadly condemned the franchise as an institution. As we later point out, it ordered all feature pictures to be sold picture by picture and theatre by theatre through competitive bidding. The combined effect of the prohibition against franchises as an institution and the affirmative direction of picture by picture selling is to prevent the small independent exhibitor from obtaining any commitment of pictures whatever from any distributor for any period of time, no matter how short, and to force him into the hopeless position of attempting to live from hand to mouth by bidding in the open market for each picture desired, against the powerful competition of affiliated and independent circuit theatres. Although such franchises were declared invalid, their validity was not an issue in the case, since the only complaint about franchises was concerned with those made with large circuits. These, it was claimed, discriminated against small exhibitors.

Thus, we submit, a substantial question is presented as to whether the decree properly enjoins exclusive-dealing arrangements, in the form of licenses under copyright, with the alleged victims of a conspiracy.

At the same time this unrestricted condemnation of franchises crippled Universal, a relatively small distributor, in its efforts to compete with the large integrated companies. Paragraph IV of the Decree specifically saved to the integrated companies the right to freely show the motion pictures produced by them in their own theatres. Yet by reason of the condemnation of franchises with small exhibitors, and the requirement of picture-by-picture selling, Universal is prevented, unless it is able and willing to buy theatres outright, from arranging to have its pictures regularly shown in theatres strategically located throughout the country, i.e., from having and obtaining show-windows for its pictures.

It is submitted that Universal has just as much right under the Sherman Act, if indeed not much more right, to obtain show-windows for its pictures by long-term contractual arrangements with small exhibitors as the powerful integrated companies have to retain such show-windows through ownership of the theatres involved, and that the denial of this right presents a substantial question.

This Court approved the legality of exclusive agencies in Federal Trade Commission v. Curtis Publishing Co., 260 U. S. 568. In Restatement of the Law of Contracts, c. 18, Sec. 516, exclusive agency contracts are listed as one of the well-established categories of reasonable restraints of trade. Many cases to this effect are cited in Williston on Contracts, Section 1645. This is particularly true, we submit, where a medium-sized distributor is dealing with a small exhibitor, and the exclusive agency is limited in time and area. A fortiori is it true where the exclusive agency is granted by license under copyright.

It is likewise submitted that the injunction against Universal's entering into master agreements, irrespective of circumstances, and of the status and purposes of the other contracting party, is unwarranted.

In imposing upon Universal the duty of selling its pictures picture-by-picture and theatre-by-theatre to the highest bidder having an adequate theatre, and the duty of serving applicants for non-exclusive runs on uniform terms, and in prescribing the many other features of the competitive bidding system as set forth in the Assignments of Error, the District Court has, we believe, gone beyond anything heretofore approved by this Court as a proper remedy for violation of the Sherman Act. In both U. S. v. Bausch & Lomb Optical Co., 321 U. S. 707 at p. 728, and Associated Press v. U. S., 326 U. S. 1, at p. 25, it is to be noted that the Supreme Court deliberately refused to approve requests of the Government for relief tending in the same direction as the competitive bidding and service upon uniform terms decreed in this case, but going not nearly as far. The fact that competitive bidding or non-discriminatory service requirements may be, under some circumstances, appropriate regulatory devices, when imposed by an administrative commission under authority of an Act of Congress, does not mean that they are authorized judicial sanctions, taking away as they do "the long recognized right of a trader or manufacturer engaged in an entirely private business, freely to exercise his own independent discretion as to the parties with whom he will deal." U. S. v.

Colgate Co., 250 U. S. 300, at p. 307, Federal Trade Commission v. Raymond Bros.-Clark Co., 263 U. S. 565 at p. 573. Were they authorized by statute, as they are not, we submit that such sanctions would violate the due process clause of the Fifth Amendment. We contend that imposition by a Court likewise violates such clause. Similar considerations apply to the requirements that Universal may not "discriminate" in favor of old customers, and must not "arbitrarily" refuse a run, especially in view of the failure to prescribe adequate standards in the latter respect.

The foregoing is entirely aside from the many patent deficiencies in the competitive bidding method set up by the Decree. To cite only one, it is provided that the exhibitor may offer to license a picture upon a flat rental or for a percentage of the gross receipts, and that the distributor is to accept the bid of the highest bidder. Yet it should be plain that if one exhibitor offers $1,000 for a picture and another offers 25% of his gross receipts, it will be impossible to determine which is the highest bidder. The distributor, moreover, is forbidden to offer its pictures on a percentage basis, a wholly normal method of doing business.

Thus a number of substantial questions are presented by these provisions of the Decree.

In Federal Trade Commission v. Gratz, 253 U. S. 421, this Court held that the required purchase of articles in combination by a seller having no power to control or dominate the market was not an unfair method of competition. In a dissenting opinion protesting the dismissal, as a matter of law, of the Federal Trade Commission's complaint, Mr. Justice Brandeis said, page 438, "It is obvious that the imposition of such a condition (that cotton bagging be bought in order to get steel ties to bind cotton bales) is not necessarily and universally an unfair method; but that it may be such under some circumstances seems equally clear."

(Emphasis ours.) He then pointed out that the ability of the seller to dominate the business was a crucial consideration. Universal, of course, does not by any stretch of the imagination possess any such power.

In Federal Trade Commission v. Paramount Famous-Lasky Corporation, 57 Fed. 2nd 152 (C. C. A. 2, 1932), the practice of block booking was held to be legal, largely on the ground that the evidence did not show that the defendant dominated the business, although in fact it was then one of the largest factors, if not the largest factor, in the business. Universal is now indisputably a relatively small factor in the business. In the Gratz and Paramount Famous-Lasky Corporation cases the sole matter at issue was the legality of combination sales under the particular circumstances, and a large amount of evidence dealing with the practice and various aspects thereof was considered. In the instant case the record with relation to so-called "block-booking" is so fragmentary as to be virtually non-existent. Indeed, there is not even any evidence in the record that the sale of one picture was conditioned upon the sale of others. All that appears is that Columbia and Universal generally sold a season's product at one time. It is of great importance to the smaller distributors and exhibitors that they be able to sell and buy a season's product at one time, since this enables them to better compete with their much larger competitors. It is respectfully submitted that a substantial question is here involved.

APPEALS FROM THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE UNITED STATES FOR THE SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF NEW YORK

REPLY BRIEF FOR UNIVERSAL PICTURES COMPANY, INC., ET AL., APPELLANTS

The only answer which the Government attempts in opposition to our fully elaborated and documented argument demonstrating that Universal's feature film-licensing is conducted in an entirely legal manner, in all of its phases, and that we were no part of any conspiracy, horizontal or vertical, is (1) to claim that Interstate Circuit v. U. S., 306 U. S. 208, is controlling, under the findings of the Court below, and (2) to assert that it was incumbent upon us to license our films, picture by picture and theatre by theatre, in order to avoid unreasonable restraint of interstate commerce. We discuss these contentions in order.

1. The Interstate Circuit Case and the Relevant Findings of the Court Below.

This case, and the findings of the Court below with respect to admission prices, runs and clearances, claimed to bring us within it, are the sole reliance of the Government in its brief, in respect of its basic claim that Universal was implicated in an alleged combination and conspiracy among the major defendants to fix admission prices, runs and clearances in the domestic motion picture theatre market. (Gov. bf., pp. 16, 52, Point I (A), pp. 14-19).

Since Universal had no theatres, it was not at all interested in differentials in admission prices between prior-run and subsequent-run theatres as a means of sustaining theatre-operating profits, the protection of which, the Government claims, in respect of the major defendants, cannot be justified by the possession of copyright monopolies. Universal was, however, concerned that the admission prices which were being charged by its licensee theatres, whether prior or subsequent-run, should not be reduced while—and only while—its pictures were being shown therein, for a wholly different reason, i.e., the legitimate purpose of obtaining for itself the maximum rewards under its copyright monopolies..

It was pointed out in our opening brief (pp. 106-8) that Universal never attempted to interfere in any way with the admission prices respectively charged by its prior and subsequent-run licensees, and indeed could not as a practical matter have interfered, if it had wanted to. All that it did was to require a covenant from each of its licensees not to reduce its admission price during the run of the pictures licensed to it by Universal. At any time any licensee was not running Universal pictures, it could do anything it pleased with its admission price. This covenant, as we fully explained in our opening brief (pp. 64-81), was vitally necessary to protect the aggregate reward accruing to Universal from the showing of its copyrighted pictures on all of the various runs.

The Government's argument under the following heading is illuminating as to the Government's theory in this connection (Gov. bf., p. 16): "The use by each distributor of license restrictions intended to suppress admission price competition between competing theatres is substantially undisputed". In support of this contention, it says (Gov. bf., pp. 16-17): "The defendants' film licenses habitually impose explicit restrictions upon the use of their films, the effect of which is to stipulate admission prices for theatrical entertainment to which their sole contribution is the supplying of a positive print on a rental basis. Since the stipulated admission price is generally the price charged by the theatre for all films, such price-fixing bears no relation to the quality of the exhibition rights granted by any particular license". Thus it claims that run and clearance are "simply devices for fixing price differentials between competing theatres in order to maintain their relative playing position".

This argument is completely fallacious insofar as Universal is concerned. As pointed out in our opening brief, p. 69, it is completely untrue that the covenant against reduction of admission price fixes the admission price for the theatre in which other pictures or entertainment, in addition to Universal's features, may be shown. The exhibitor is completely free to charge anything he pleases for such additional entertainment. Thus the minimum admission price covenant is for the sole purpose of protecting Universal's reward under its copyrights, and is not for the purpose of fixing the admission price of the licensed theatres, to protect theatre-operating profits. It is entirely immaterial that the theatre-owner may regard only part of his admission price as appertaining to Universal's picture. Universal regards all of it as thus appertaining, and having the right to select any minimum price it sees fit, can select this price.

Despite these obvious facts, the Government would have it that the Court below found that the purpose of this covenant in Universal's licenses was to protect theatre-operating profits (Gov. bf., p. 16), for it argues that the Interstate Circuit case is conclusive "unless it can be shown that the Court's subsidiary findings which demonstrate that the purpose of their license restrictions was to control price competition are erroneous."* Neither here or any other place in its brief does it cite any finding made by the Court to support this contention with respect to Universal, and we think it is clear that such a finding does not in fact exist.

*In two respects this statement is vague. "Their" may or may not mean all the defendant distributors. The phrase "to control price competition" may or may not mean for the purpose of sustaining theatre-operating profits. When Universal licenses a feature picture to a first-run theatre charging 50 cents, and thereafter to a second-run theatre charging 25 cents, and in each case requires a covenant not to reduce the admission price, while Universal pictures are running, it is of course obvious that the two theatres cannot compete by reducing their respective prices, unless they are willing to risk the cancellation of their Universal licenses or the withdrawal of the run and clearance privileges extended them by Universal.

Under the Government's express admission, unless such a finding exists and there is evidence to support it, the case is taken out from under what the Government says is the doctrine of the Interstate Circuit case.

But even if there was such a finding, as the Government claims, and evidence to support it, the Interstate Circuit case would not, under any possible construction, be authority for the Government's position, either in respect of its claim that Universal was implicated in a horizontal conspiracy with the major distributors, or in respect of its claim that Universal was implicated in vertical conspiracies with the affiliated exhibitors it licensed.

The horizontal conspiracy in the Interstate Circuit case was inferred from the fact that the distributors, therein concerned, followed what were found to be parallel courses of action, after being confronted with the express written demand of the manager of two large circuits that each distributor agree with these circuits that it would impose restrictions upon subsequent-run theatres which were in competition with the subsequent-run theatres of the circuits.

The restrictions which the circuit manager demanded were: (1) that each distributor make an express agreement with his circuits that it would require competing subsequent-run theatres which had been charging considerably less than 25¢ admission to raise their admission price to 25¢; and (2) to abstain from their customary practice of double-featuring. Otherwise the circuit manager advised the distributors that he would not continue to show their Class "A" feature pictures at a 40¢ admission price. This Court found that the agreements demanded were in substance made by the distributors with the circuits.

This Court held that there was a horizontal conspiracy among the distributors and vertical conspiracies between each distributor and the circuits. Three of the justices thought that the action of the distributors in both respects was entirely legal under the Copyright Laws. Great emphasis was placed by the majority upon the fact that a radical change was compelled in the admission-price policies of the competing subsequent-run exhibitors, and also upon the fact that the distributors were interfering, by express agreement with the circuits, with something which was none of their concern, i.e., the right of the subsequent-run exhibitors to show the pictures of others in double-feature programs along with the features of the defendant-distributors.

Although this Court expressly pointed out (p. 229) that "the case is not one of the mere restriction of competition between the first showing of a copyrighted film by Interstate and the subsequent showing of the same film by a licensee of the copyright owner," the Government claims that the case holds exactly that, for it says, (p. 16) that this Court held that "the use of admission price restrictions by a single distributor to suppress price competition between theatres was also unlawful," quite evidently intending to convey the idea that the use of the covenant against reduction of the admission price with theatres in successive runs, in respect of copyrighted pictures, was unlawful, even if exclusively in the distributor's interest.

Since, as explained in our opening brief (pp. 48-50), an exclusive license under copyright is clearly legal, as was conceded by this Court in the Interstate Circuit case itself (pp. 227-8), and its very purpose is to prevent others from competing with the exclusive licensee, in the licensor's interest, the Government's argument is not only not supported by the Interstate Circuit case, but is definitely contradicted thereby.

For like reasons, the run and clearance provisions, by which Universal licensed its feature pictures so as to reap the maximum reward from the various prior and subsequent-run theatres, in accordance with such playing positions as they had attained, are entirely legal, as has been demonstrated in our opening brief.

There is no similarity whatsoever between this case, insofar as Universal is concerned, and the Interstate Circuit case, in respect of the charge of horizontal conspiracy. In that case the focus producing similar action among the distributors was the blunt demand of the manager of the two dominant circuits in the Texas and New Mexico territory for parallel action in making express agreements with his circuits whereby competing subsequent-run exhibitors were forced to change in a radical way admission price and double-feature policies. In our case the focus producing uniformity of action in respect of admission price is the obviously reasonable consistent admission-price policy of the exhibitor, plus the use by all distributors of the wholly legal and obviously indicated covenant against reduction of such admission price during the runs of their respective feature pictures. In the case of clearance, as fully explained in our opening brief, the programming requirements of the exhibitor, together with the competitive forces operating in the market against a relatively small distributor, bring about uniformity.

In respect of vertical conspiracy the distinction is even more evident. We made no agreements whatsoever with prior-run exhibitors that we would impose any restrictions of any kind upon subsequent-run exhibitors, and there was no finding or evidence to this effect. The only restriction we did impose upon each of our licensees (for as shown in our opening brief (p. 57-9) clearance is not a restriction upon them) was the legal covenant against admission price-reduction, and no one dictated our imposition of that.

The transactions with which the Interstate Circuit case were concerned took place in 1934, and since that time the financial control and executive management of Universal have shifted to entirely new hands.

2. The Contention that Universal Must License Its Copyrighted Motion Pictures Picture by Picture and Theatre by Theatre.

There are about 18,000 motion picture theatres in the United States, and each is a potential market for Universal's pictures, whether features, Westerns, short-subjects or news-reels. Universal licenses its pictures to the great majority of these theatres. As heretofore pointed out, its regular practice has been to produce about one feature picture a week, many Westerns and so-called short subjects, and a weekly news picture. The number of pictures listed in G. X. 261 (the franchise particularly referred to by the Government and printed in its Appendix at pp. 50-58) is 185 per year, counting each news-release as one picture. If it had to license these pictures, one by one, to the many thousands of theatres with which it deals, something like a million transactions or more would be involved.

Yet the Government would have it that this is the only legal way for Universal to license any of its copyrighted pictures. Since the same reasoning which it advanced to condemn the group-selling of features also condemns the group-selling of weekly news-releases and short subjects, the number of salesmen it would have to have to accomplish this task is food for the imagination.

In making this contention that the only legal kind of licensing for Universal is picture by picture and theatre by theatre, the Government refers to no legal authority whatsoever. In claiming that we condition the licensing of one picture upon the licensing of another, the Government offers no record reference to combat the flat assertion in our opening brief (p. 52) that there was no evidence that such a practice was followed by us.

There is no reason to discriminate against copyrighted articles in respect of bulk sales. As was said in the Interstate Circuit case by one of the Justices (p 236), "All the Copyright Act does is to create a form of property in the literary or artistic production of the author or artist. The Act attaches to the product of his brain certain attributes of property. * * * The monopoly, so called, amounts to nothing more than the attachment to the work of an author or composer or producer of motion pictures of the same rights as inhere in other property under the common law". An owner of a bushel of wheat does not have to offer each grain separately, because they may vary in quality, nor does the owner of many copyrights, in order that someone may have satisfaction of knowing exactly how much each brings, and that the reward is in direct relation to the quality of the copyright.

The Government argues, however, that our complaint as to the judgment below is founded principally upon our claim that "Since the major defendants may force their films into the market by the use of their affiliated theatres, the distributors without affiliated theatres are compelled to use franchises, block-booking and master agreements to force their films into the market." It then goes on to say that it does not dispute the soundness of this argument, insofar as it is based upon an "economic necessity arising from competing in a market dominated by the major defendants" (Gov. bf., pp. 7-8, 63).

At one and the same time the Government argues that by means of block-booking, (1) we force feature pictures upon exhibitors who do not like them, and (2) that we license our pictures in a block before they are made, and hence before they can judge them. It is not abashed by the fact that the undisputed evidence shows, as pointed out in our opening brief (pp. 85-6), that independent exhibitors insist upon Universal's committing itself to license its pictures to them before they are produced, so that they may be assured of grist for the mill, which operates continuously day in and day out, frequently several shows a day.

Nor is it abashed by the fact that if Universal produced feature pictures ranging in cost from several hundred thousand dollars each to several million dollars each, and made the necessarily large capital expenditures incident thereto, without having an assured market for its pictures for at least a few years ahead, it would not likely be in business very long.

Articles costing these tremendous amounts to produce, particularly those whose success is largely a matter of public taste, cannot be produced upon the mere hope that exhibitors will take to them sufficiently to commit themselves to pay film rentals sufficient to recoup the expenditure plus a reasonable profit. This is one of the main reasons why a distributor finds it advantageous to control theatres, and the reason that makes it obligatory for a non-integrated distributor to make franchises if it is to compete on anything like equal terms with integrated companies.

In the late 1920's the Government attacked block-booking as practiced by Paramount, then the largest company in the industry. As pointed out in our opening brief (pp. 88-94), this attack, made on a comprehensive record, failed, and the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit unanimously held that Paramount had not acted illegally in the premises. Federal Trade Commission v. Paramount Famous-Lasky Corp., 57 F. (2d) 152 (CCA 2nd, 1932). The Government did not apply for certiorari in this case, and the industry, with good reason, has ever since considered it to be the law, particularly in view of the like general holding, in respect of conditioning by a non-monopolistically situated supplier, by this Court in Federal Trade Commission v. Gratz, 253 U. S. 421.

In U. S. v. U. S. Steel Corp., 251 U. S. 417, this Court found no illegality in the activities of the U. S. Steel Corporation, which did some 41% of the steel business at the time of suit (pp. 438-9, 442), one of the most evident things about which was the fact that it was an integrated business. This the Court carefully noted more than once in its opinion, saying for example, at p. 438: "The tendency of the industry and the purpose of the corporation in yielding to it was expressed in comprehensive condensation by the word 'integrated' which signifies continuity in the process of the industry from ore mines to the finished product".

No case in this Court decided since the Steel case, of which we are aware, has condemned integration as a method of providing outlets for products manufactured by affiliated concerns. That section of the Government's brief as Appellant which deals with this question (pp. 90-114) cites no case which we believe can be fairly held to have such significance.

At the time this case was instituted in 1938 integration had obtained in the industry for 20 years, and the major defendants had been integrated for periods ranging from 10 to 20 years. (Paramount bf., pp. 22-26). Prior to 1938, so far as we know, the Government never made the claim that integration in the motion-picture industry was illegal. At any rate it never succeeded in putting the idea over. Integration has, of course, been a commonplace thing in many other industries, including oil and motors.

In making franchises with theatre chains, we obviously achieve a much less fixed relationship with the theatre chain than each of the major distributors has with its affiliated theatre chain. Our relationship is for a few years at the most. By means of the relationship which they have, each of their theatres is assured of a permanent franchise for their first-class product. The Court below held that such a relationship was legal, and yet held that our much more fragile relationship involved in our franchises was illegal per se. This simply does not make sense.

It is asserted by the Government (Gov. bf., p. 42) that the reason why franchises with theatre chains which are known as master contracts are illegal per se is that such an agreement (1) ties up a substantial segment of the playing-time available in the circuit's theatres for a period of years, without regard to the merits of the licensor's product, and thus prevents other distributors from competing for that playing-time upon the merits of such films as they may have available during those years; and (2) commits a substantial part of the available film supply to the circuit's theatres without any consideration of the merits of competing theatres as outlets for the product.

It thus makes the argument that exhibitors do not know what they are doing, when they commit themselves to licensing our pictures over a period of years, and have no comprehension in respect of the merits of our pictures.

If by past experience the exhibitors did not know pretty well what they would get in our pictures, and did not feel that it was to their advantage to commit themselves to license them, as against the mere hope of more suitable competitive pictures arriving on the scene, it is quite plain that they would not enter into the franchises with us.

Likewise the Government's argument that when we license a chain of theatres, we do so completely unaware of what we might obtain from the theatres in competition with them is wholly unrealistic. Our long experience in the business obviously makes us well aware of the film-rental paying capacities of every theatre in the country. No attempt was made by the Government moreover to prove that in the aggregate, or even in some instances, better offers were made by the theatres in competition with the various theatres in the licensed chain. It simply assumes that we might have made a better deal with them or some of them.

As "an extreme example" of an illegal franchise with a theatre chain, the Government refers to our Interstate Circuit franchise, G. X. 261, printed at pp. 50-58 of the Appendix to its brief.

This agreement expressly provides in Item 12 that "All first-run product is to be dated and played within availability period, otherwise product will be considered automatically available for subsequent-run bookings". In the Griffiths case* the Government made two main objections to master agreements. The failure to include this clause was one of them. The other objection was to a lump-sum film rental. In this franchise the lump-sum payment of $260,000, payable at the rate of $5,000 a week, is only a tentative basis determined upon in order to assure us of being paid in something like proper weekly amounts as we supply the pictures. It is nothing but a financing device. As item 3 in the franchise shows, each of the 44 features is valued at $3,750, and the three Frank Lloyd productions at $8,000. These are the principal pictures licensed.

*U. S. v. Griffiths Amusement Co. et al., 68 Fed. Supp. 180.

The number of pictures in each category to be delivered to each theatre in each town is stated, and these vary somewhat in number. The varying number of days each theatre is to have the pictures is stated. For the second season, a review and revision is provided for to determine whether the $5,000 weekly payment should be revised upward or downward (item 15). A like review and revision is provided for in respect of the third season (item 16). The exhibitor agrees to play the product on substantially the nationally designated percentage terms, as set up by the distributor, which designations are to be mutually agreed upon, based on performance. Thus specific film rental terms are contemplated for each feature picture. If such terms result in film rentals in excess of $260,000, then the exhibitor is required to pay the distributor one-half the excess.

From the foregoing it can be readily seen, since we have heretofore shown that the quantity of pictures dealt with and the number of theatres dealt with are not legally objectionable, the Government's criticism of this franchise is ill-conceived. It is the only one of our seven franchises in evidence which even mentions a tentative lump-sum film rental.

It is thus evident that when we made franchises, indiscriminately with independent exhibitors and affiliated exhibitors, whether single theatres or chains, in order to secure as firm outlets as possible for our pictures, with as wide a theatre coverage as possible, we were fully justified in believing these agreements to be lawful, and, contrary to the Government's artful suggestion, do believe that they are fully lawful. If any of the theatre chains were, as the Government claims, engaged in conspiracies against their smaller competitors, and were aided therein by having the use of the pictures which we supplied, this is not a consequence which can be charged to anyone but those who were engaged in such conspiracies. The remedy, of course, would be to enjoin them from enforcing such franchises as was done in the Crescent case. We are no more responsible for any abuse thereof than we would be if we were an independent power company, and had made a contract with the Aluminum Company of America to supply it with our output of power for its electrolytic installations at many of its plants over a period of years, thus enabling it to make aluminum for sale to the public at monopolistic prices.

STATEMENT AS TO JURISDICTION SUBMITTED WITH PETITION FOR APPEAL.

In compliance with Rule 12 of the Rules of the Supreme Court of the United States, as amended, American Theatres Association; Inc.; Southern California Theatre Owners Association; Joseph Moritz; Southern California Amusement Company, Inc.; Exhibitors' Service, Inc.; Lawrence Capitol, Inc.; Bijou Amusement Company and Paul Realty Company; Andy Anderson; Arch and Milas L. Hurley; Raymond and Willard Gervers; Gamble Enterprises, Inc.; and St. Louis Ambassador Theatre, Inc., Eden Theatre Company, St. Louis Missouri Theatre, Inc., and Fanchon & Marco Service Corporation, petitioners for intervention in the above entitled cause (hereinafter called petitioners), submit herewith their statement showing the basis of the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court upon appeal to review the judgment of the District Court.

The above entitled action was brought by the United States in a special statutory Three-judge District Court in the Southern District of New York pursuant to 15 U.S.C. §28. The suit was brought to enjoin violations of the anti-trust laws. An opinion was published by that court on June 11, 1946. On October 21, 1946, your petitioners moved for leave to intervene in the proceedings because they believed that they would be bound by a provision of the decree requiring licensing of film by competitive bidding and would be inadequately represented. On December 31, 1946, the court entered its decree modifying its opinion in some respects but nevertheless imposing a system of competitive bidding. On January 21, 1947, the court denied your petitioners' Motion for Leave to Intervene.

A. Statutory Provisions on which Jurisdiction Rests.

The statutory provision which confers jurisdiction upon the Supreme Court to review the judgment is Section 29 of Title 15 U.S.C., 32 Stat. 823, which reads as follows:

> "In every suit in equity brought in any district court of the United States under sections 1-7 or 15 of this title, wherein the United States is complainant, an appeal from the final decree of the district court will lie only to the Supreme Court and must be taken within sixty days from the entry thereof."

B. The Statute of the United States Involved in this Appeal.

This appeal challenges (1) the propriety of Paragraph 8(c) of Part II of the decree of the court entered on December 31, 1946, imposing competitive bidding requirements in certain cases and (2) the denial by the court on January 21, 1947, of the petitioners' Motion for Leave to Intervene. The decree is based upon the Sherman Antitrust Act, 26 Stat. 209, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1 and 2, which read as follows:

"§1. Trusts, etc., in restraint of trade illegal; exception of resale price agreements; penalty.

Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is hereby declared to be illegal: Provided, that nothing contained in sections 1-7 of this title shall render illegal, contracts or agreements prescribing minimum prices for the resale of a commodity which bears, or the label or container of which bears, the trade mark, brand, or name of the producer or distributor of such commodity and which is in free and open competition with commodities of the same general class produced or distributed by others, when contracts or agreements of that description are lawful as applied to intrastate transactions, under any statute, law, or public policy now or hereafter in effect in any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia in which such resale is to be made, or to which the commodity is to be transported for such resale, and the making of such contracts or agreements shall not be an unfair method of competition under section 45, as amended and supplemented, of this title: Provided further, That the preceding proviso shall not make lawful any contract or agreement, providing for the establishment or maintenance of minimum resale prices on any commodity herein involved, between manufacturers, or between producers, or between wholesalers, or between brokers, or between factors, or between retailers, or between persons, firms, or corporations in competition with each other. Every person who shall make any contract or engage in any combination or conspiracy declared by sections 1-7 of this title to be illegal shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction thereof, shall be punished by fine not exceeding $5,000, or by imprisonment not exceeding one year, or by both said punishments, in the discretion of the court."

"§2. Monopolizing trade a misdemeanor; penalty.

Every person who shall monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction thereof, shall be punished by fine not exceeding $5,000, or by imprisonment not exceeding one year, or by both said punishments, in the discretion of the court."

The Motion for Leave to Intervene was brought under Rule 24 (a) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, 28 U.S.C. following §723c. Said Rule 24 (a) reads as follows:

"Intervention of Right. Upon timely application anyone shall be permitted to intervene in an action: (1) when a statute of the United States confers an unconditional right to intervene; or (2) when the representation of the applicant's interest by existing parties is or may be inadequate and the applicant is or may be bound by a judgment in the action; or (3) when the applicant is so situated as to be adversely affected by a distribution or other disposition of property in the custody of the court or of an officer thereof."

C. Dates of Judgments and Petition for Appeal.

The dates of the final judgments of the District Court here sought to be reviewed are December 31, 1946, and January 21, 1947. Petition for allowance of appeal was presented on February 26, 1947.

D. Substantial Nature of the Question Presented.

1. The Nature of the Proceedings and Parties.

This is an action instituted by the United States to enjoin violations of the Sherman Act in the motion picture industry. The court found violations of the Act by the defendants who are the major motion picture distributors and their exhibitor affiliates. The violations of the Sherman Act involved relate largely to discriminatory and restrictive practices of the defendants acting in concert directed against independent exhibitors. The substance of the violations found was a consistent and concerted course of conduct by defendant distributors to protect theatres owned or controlled by such defendants against the competition of independent exhibitors. Generally independent exhibitors were "systematically excluded from the opportunity to procure preferred runs of pictures distributed by defendants in the localities in which defendants' theatres operate . . ." 66 F. Supp. 323, 330. In order to prevent certain of these practices the court adopted an extensive decree. This appeal is directed against a single provision of that decree, Section 8(c) of Part II thereof. This provision requires distributors to lease pictures to exhibitors only by competitive bidding, wherever more than one theatre desires to exhibit pictures under arrangements which exclude simultaneous exhibition in competing theatres.

Your petitioners are an association of exhibitors and various members of such an association who are engaged in showing motion pictures at theatres throughout the country. Their interests were not represented in the action and the requirement concerning competitive bidding will bind them and will adversely affect their business. Under the leadership of the American Theatres Association, which has an extensive membership of over 6,000 theatres throughout the country consisting of exhibitors of all types, the petitioners gathered together to seek intervention in order to point out to the court the effect of the proposed system of competitive bidding upon their business and to urge the court not to adopt such a provision.

2. The Effect of the Decree and Petitioners.

The petitioners assert that a system of competitive bidding will drastically restrict their access to the films necessary to operate their theatres and the value of their property. It will likewise impair the competitive positions which many of these theatres hold in the industry.

The restrictions of the decree are imposed directly only on the defendants. But by prescribing the terms on which the defendants may license films, the District Court has also prescribed the terms upon which petitioners must secure the rights to the sole product upon which they rely for the operation of their theatres.

The plan for competitive bidding imposed by the court's decree regulates the dealings between petitioners and the major distributors from whom they buy their feature pictures. It authorizes and requires these major distributors to follow a preconceived plan of uniform and concerted action which substantially controls the buying of film and restricts the independent competitive activity which any one of the major distributors would otherwise be free to undertake. It is obvious that if the major distributors were to limit each other's action in this way by voluntary agreement, they would be guilty of a violation of the antitrust laws. The court's decree attempts to legalize an otherwise illegal plan for concerted action to regulate the market for film. At the same time the court denies the buyers in the market so regulated by it their right to intervene and object to the combination set up by the court to control their methods of buying feature pictures.

This is not a case, as the court seems to assume, where persons, not parties to an antitrust action, are indirectly and incidentally affected by a decree introducing competition into a formerly closed market. The competitive bidding plan instead of restoring competition, affirmatively directs a combination to restrict freedom of competitive action on the part of the individual distributor defendants. It attempts to make legal a course of concerted action which would otherwise be illegal. In so far as the decree accomplishes that purpose it necessarily takes away from petitioners legal rights which they could have pursued against the combination in the absence of the decree. In other words, if the plan of competitive bidding stands, it binds petitioners in the following ways:

1. It compels the buyers in the market for films to submit to market regulations imposed by the concerted action of sellers who control a substantial part of the supply.

2. It takes away from petitioners their present right to enjoin such concerted action on the part of the defendants.

3. It takes away from petitioners their present right to recover damages under the antitrust laws on a showing that the operation of the plan has caused them injury.

4. It authorizes and compels the major distributors to break off established relationships with independents which have no taint of illegality whatever.

No doubt, the court is moved by the belief that the limited type of competition involved in enforced competitive bidding will be fairer than uncontrolled free competitive activity. But this is an economic judgment which the court has no power to make. Congress has not, and indeed it could not, delegate the broad power to make competition fairer by restricting competitive activity. A. L. A. Schechter Poultry Corp. v. United States, 295 U. S. 495.

3. The Impropriety of the Decree.

The competitive bidding plan is bad both as a matter of law and in practice, as set forth below.

(a) The decree is bad as a matter of law because it affimatively restricts competition. The term competitive bidding has a deceptive sound, which has led the court to confuse it with actual competition. It is true that in many markets, competition is accomplished by competitive bidding. In the grain market for example, most purchases are made on a competitive exchange. But this does not mean that competition, even in the grain market, would be furthered by preventing the existence of private deals and established relationships between buyer and seller. Competitive bidding is often the result of a free market because, in competition with other methods equally available to the buyer, it happens in most instances to be more convenient. Such a situation occurs, as in the grain market, when the supply is not controlled by a few concerns in a few hands. Where, however, a few sellers control the supply, competitive bidding by the unorganized buyers destroys competition instead of creating it. In motion picture exhibition the record establishes that the supply of pictures is closely controlled. And in no event is there either economic or legal justification in any market to close the doors to the competitive possibility of private deals.

Making competitive bidding the sole permissible method of buying or selling does not promote competition; it restricts it. The decree ignores the fact that there are other ways of competing for a scarce product than by making the highest bid. Thus, the defendants have wide-spread outlets in principal cities to which they may give their own pictures without competitive bidding. These outlets compete with the independents. The independents have no bargaining power comparable with that of the affiliates of the defendants who have greater resources, and also their own pictures to rely on. The competitive position of independents must depend on their ability to make individual deals on the basis of good will, assurance of long-continued relationships, better service and other inducements unrelated to price. Yet the decree prevents independents from using that kind of bargaining power, or that type of competitive effort.

(b) The plan of competitive bidding in practice will cause irreparable damage to petitioners. Under the decree a defendant, who might otherwise desire to continue to furnish pictures to an independent, either because of the assurance given by long-continued relationships, or because it might think it advantageous from a public point of view to preserve some little independent competition in the area, is compelled to break off that relationship and sell to the affiliate of another defendant who makes a higher bid. Thus the last protection of independents without sufficient resources to make the highest bid for each separate picture is gone. Their assurance of a supply of pictures at a price they can afford to pay is destroyed. A way for the piecemeal destruction of independents is provided by the decree.

Petitioners buy in a market where the supply is in the hands of a few. The principal suppliers have been found guilty of a conspiracy to dominate the market and eliminate competition in exhibition. By this conspiracy independents have been weakened and destroyed. The relief offered by the court is to induce the wrongdoers in control of the supply to charge all the traffic will bear. At the same time the weakened independents are required to compete with each other in paying the highest possible price to the defendants.

Presumably the court thought that the highest bid system would prevent favoritism by the defendants toward individual buyers of films. The fact is that the peculiar character of the product sold will create new opportunities for favoritism under competitive bidding. The sale of the right to exhibit a film in a theatre is not like the sale of an ordinary commodity. The factors which determine the best bid for the exclusive right to show the picture for a limited period of time are highly uncertain. Their relative value depends solely on a business judgment which cannot be reviewed unless it is so bad that it can be called arbitrary and capricious. There is the location of the theatre, the type of people who patronize it, the good will of the exhibitor in the community, the length of run which he offers, the clearance over other theatres, the time of exhibition, the type of exhibition, the ability of the exhibitor successfully to advertise the picture, and so on. The normal procedure of renting feature films for a percentage of the gross receipts adds other factors such as the size of the theatre. Where and how a picture will net the most money for a defendant who offers it for competitive bidding on all these factors is only a guess. Hence the court allows the defendants to reject all bids if it desires. It allows the selection of the successful bidder to depend on the uncontrolled business judgment of the very parties whom it has found guilty of discrimination in the past. Thus, the effect of the plan is to enable any defendant to favor any exhibitor, including affiliates of other defendants, and receive protection from the decree unless its business judgment is so obviously bad it can be called capricious.

The decree sets up a defendant-controlled scheme of regulations of the industry. We submit that if a regulated market for films is to be set up by depriving independents of their present remedies against concerted action by the major distributors, it must be done by Congress, and not by judicial fiat.

4. Petitioners' Right to Intervene.

All the requirements for intervention as of right appear in this case. The facts set out in the foregoing statement establish that petitioners and the independent exhibitors which they represent are bound by the decree imposing on them a system of competitive bidding. If the other requirements for intervention are satisfied we think that the right of the petitioners to present their objections to this Court as intervenors can hardly be disputed. The other requirements are: that the petition be timely, and that the interests of the petitioners are not adequately represented.

On the timeliness of the petition there can be no doubt. It was filed before the decree was signed, immediately after petitioners learned from its opinion that the court contemplated imposing on them a scheme for competitive bidding. This was the first occasion on which intervention for the purpose of opposing competitive bidding was possible.

The inadequacy of the representation of petitioners' interest is equally clear. Some mild dissent to the plan was voiced by the defendants, but it can scarcely be held that petitioners' interests are adequately represented by those found guilty of conspiring to discriminate against them. The government would be the natural party to protect petitioners. It has not only voiced no objection but actually indicated before the court its willingness to try out the plan. At the same time it has attempted to prevent intervention by petitioners.

It is important that this Court should decide that persons immediately and directly affected, as are the petitioners, do have a right to be heard when their fate is being decided and to present their case on appeal to this Court. Their interests are sufficiently substantial so that they should not be relegated to a position of informal advisers whose voices may be heard only as a matter of grace. They have petitioned the court below and this Court not because of any general interest in the form of decree adopted by the court but because of the specific contemplated imposition upon them of a method of doing business which will bind them and which threatens the value of millions of dollars which they have invested.

E. Cases which Sustain Jurisdiction on this Appeal.

United States v. Terminal Railroad Assn. of St. Louis, 236 U. S. 194, 199;

Missouri-Kansas Pipe Line Co. v. United States, 312 U. S. 502, 506-509.

Cf. Evens & Howard Fire Brick Company, et al., v. United States 236 U. S. 210; United States v. California Co-operative Canneries, 279 U. S. 553, 556.

In the St. Louis Terminal case certain provisions of a decree under the Sherman Act reorganizing a combination of railway terminal facilities had the effect of discontinuing the public service transportation of workers employed by and materials used by business firms not parties to the proceeding. This Court held that these third parties were entitled to be heard concerning the settlement of the anti-trust decree "in so far as it might operate prejudicially to their rights." The competitive bidding provisions of the instant decree set up a combination among the major producers designed to prevent petitioners from using normal methods of competition in buying their product. In approving such a combination the court attempts to take away petitioners' right which would otherwise exist to attack under the anti-trust laws concerted action of the defendants to regulate the market. It thus requires drastic revision of petitioners' business practices and threatens them with destruction or substantial damage. As the court said in Missouri-Kansas Pipe Line Co. v. United States, supra, "But where the enforcement of a public law also demands distinct safeguarding of private interests by giving them a formal status in the decree, the power to enforce rights thus sanctioned is not left to the public authorities nor put in the keeping of the district court's discretion." Petitioners' legal right to a market uncontrolled by concerted action of major distributors cannot be cut off without giving them the standing of parties to defend that right.

In the case of United States v. California Co-operative Canneries, supra, is found a dictum to the effect that the court below "did not refer to the decisions which hold that an order denying leave to intervene is not appealable . . . except where he who seeks to intervene has as direct and immediate interest in a res which is the subject of the suit, ..." Nothing in this dictum is in derogation to the right of appeal in this case. In the first place, Rule 24 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure permits intervention of right under the following separate circumstances: "(2) when the representation of the applicant's interest by existing parties is or may be inadequate and the applicant is or may be bound by a judgment in the action; or (3) when the applicant is so situated as to be adversely affected by a distribution or other disposition of property in the custody of the court or of an officer thereof." The California Co-operative Canneries dictum above cited refers only to situation (3) in the above Rule and not to situation (2) which is before the court here. Furthermore, even under the situation referred to in the California Co-operative Canneries case petitioners here would have a right of intervention. The court below has attempted to control the theatre business of petitioners by imposing on them rules and regulations which are as effective as a mortgage or a covenant impairing the value of the threatre and taking away freedom to operate it under existing laws. In other words, the court has seized and is attempting to control "a res" to wit: petitioners' theatres.

List of Exhibits.

Copies (1) of the opinion of Augustus N. Hand, Circuit Judge, for the statutory District Court, filed on June 11, 1946, (2) of the decree of that court filed on December 31, 1946, and memorandum supplement thereto of the same date, (3) of the order of the court denying petitioners' motion for leave to intervene on January 21, 1947, and (4) of the modification of the decree of December 31, 1946, made on February 3, 1947, are affixed hereto as Exhibits 1, 2, 3 and 4 respectively.

Conclusion.

It is clear that these appeals are within the exclusive jurisdiction of the Supreme Court and that substantial questions of widespread importance are involved requiring the review of the judgment of the statutory court in a full hearing on the merits.

8. United Artists Corporation is a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Delaware, with its principal place of business at 729 Seventh Avenue, New York, New York, and is engaged in distribution of motion pictures in various parts of the United States and in foreign countries.

The five major defendants—Paramount Pictures, Inc., Loew's, Incorporated, Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation, Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc., and Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation, and their subsidiaries—were charged in the amended and supplemental complaint with combining and conspiring unreasonably to restrain trade and commerce in the production, distribution and exhibition of motion pictures and to monopolize such trade and commerce in violation of the Sherman Act. The three minor defendants—Columbia Pictures Corporation, Universal Corporation, and their subsidiaries, which are producers and distributors, and not exhibitors, and United Artists Corporation, which is a distributor only, were likewise charged with combining and conspiring with the five major defendants and with each other unreasonably to restrain and to monopolize trade and commerce in motion pictures. As it appeared upon the trial that there was no violation of the Sherman Act in respect to production of motion pictures and that there was on the contrary active competition in production, the charge in respect to production was formally abandoned by the plaintiff. The issues therefore are whether there have been illegal restraints or monopolization in the distribution and exhibition of motion pictures.

The plaintiff contends that an illegal conspiracy and monopoly were effected by: (1) concertedly fixing the license terms before the licensees have had a fair opportunity to estimate the value and character of the films licensed and before such films were completed or shown; (2) concertedly fixing the run, clearance, and minimum admission price terms on which an exhibitor may show pictures through license agreements covering periods of a year or more; (3) concertedly conditioning the licensing of one film or group of films upon the licensing of another film or group of films and by conditioning the licensing of films in one theatre or group of theatres upon the licensing of films in other theatres or group of theatres; (4) concertedly discriminating with respect to the license terms granted to theatres in large circuits because such theatres are part of a circuit. The means of such discrimination are said to be the licensing for exhibition in theatres of the five defendant exhibitors of runs ahead of those granted to competing independent exhibitors, and the continuance of these prior runs from season to season to the prejudice of independent exhibitors. As a result independent exhibitors are systematically excluded from the opportunity to procure preferred runs of pictures distributed by the defendants in the localities in which defendants' theatres operate and at times refused any run at all in order to protect defendants' theatres from competition.

It is further charged by the plaintiff that the distributor-exhibitor defendants have combined with each other: (1) by conditioning the licensing of film distributed by one defendant in theatres operated by another upon the licensing of films distributed by the latter in the theatres operated by the former; (2) by excluding independently produced films from affiliated theatres and by excluding unaffiliated exhibitors from competing with first run or other run theatres in cities and towns where affiliated theatres are located; (3) by excluding unaffiliated exhibitors from operating theatres on the same run as affiliated exhibitors; (4) by using the first and early runs of affiliated theatres to control the film supply, runs, clearances and admission prices of operators of competing unaffiliated theatres in cities and towns in which affiliated theatres are located; (5) by pooling or otherwise sharing with each other the profits of affiliated theatres owned or controlled by two or more exhibitor defendants located in the same competitive area and frequently by together operating on the same run in cases where they would be in competition with one another except for such pooling or profit sharing agreements; (6) by effecting a division of the territory of the entire United States among them for theatre operating purposes.

The amended and supplemental complaint prays: (1) That each of the contracts, combinations and conspiracies in restraint of trade, together with attempts to monopolize the same, be declared illegal; (2) that the defendants and their subsidiaries be perpetually enjoined from continuing to carry out attempts at monopolization and all restraints of trade in distribution and exhibition of motion pictures; (3) that a nation-wide system of impartial arbitration tribunals, or such other means of efforcement as the court may deem proper, be established in order to secure adequate enforcement of whatever general and nation-wide prohibitions of illegal practices may be contained in the decree; (4) that the five major defendants and their subsidiaries be directed to divest themselves of all interest and ownership, both direct and indirect, in any theatres which the court shall find to have been used by one or more of them unreasonably to restrain trade and commerce in motion pictures.

After the amended and supplemental complaint was filed, the plaintiff and the five major defendants and their subsidiary corporations that were parties to the suit, executed a written consent to the entry of a decree by the District Court, signed November 20, 1940. A decree was made in accordance with the consent reciting that no testimony had been taken, that no provision of the decree should be construed as an admission or adjudication that any of the plaintiff's charges were true, or that the consenting defendants had violated any law, or that the doing or the failure to do any of the acts or things enjoined or directed to be done would constitute a violation of law.

The decree enjoined the consenting defendants as follows:

(1) No distributor defendant shall license feature motion pictures for public exhibition within the United States at which an admission fee is to be charged until the feature has been trade shown within the exchange district in which the exhibition is to be held.

(2) No distributor defendant shall offer for license or shall license more than five features in a single group. The license of one group of features shall not be conditioned upon the licensing of another feature or group of features, nor shall any distributor defendant require an exhibitor to license shorts, reissues, westerns, or foreigns as a condition of licensing other features. Disputes as to violation of these provisions shall be subject to arbitration. The power of the arbitrator shall be limited to a determination of whether the offer to license or the license was conditioned and, if found to be conditioned, to imposing a penalty against the distributor of not to exceed $500.

(3) No license for features to be exhibited in theatres located in one exchange district shall include theatres located in another exchange district.

(4) No distributor defendant shall refuse to license its pictures for exhibition in an exhibitor's theatre on some run to be designated by the distributor upon terms and conditions fixed by the distributor, if the exhibitor can satisfy reasonable minimum standards of theatre operation and is reputable and responsible, unless the granting of a run on any terms will have the effect of reducing the distributor's total film revenue in the competitive area in which such exhibitor's theatre is located. Controversies arising from a complaint by an exhibitor for violation of the foregoing provision shall be subject to arbitration under which an award based on a finding of violation shall direct the distributor to offer its pictures to the complainant on a run to be designated by the distributor, and upon terms fixed by the distributor, which are not calculated to defeat the purposes of this subdivision.

(5) Controversies arising from the complaint of an exhibitor that a feature licensed by a distributor defendant for exhibition in a particular theatre is generally offensive in the locality on moral, religious, or racial grounds shall be subject to arbitration, and, if the feature shall be found to be thus offensive, an award shall be made cancelling the license in so far as it relates to the exhibition of the feature in that theatre.

(6) Controversies arising upon the complaint of an exhibitor that the clearance applicable to his theatre is unreasonable shall be subject to arbitration. Reasonable clearance as to time and area was stipulated and held by the consent decree to be essential to the distribution and exhibition of motion pictures. In determining whether a clearance complained of is unreasonable the arbitrator should consider the historical development of clearance in the area, the admission price of the theatres involved; their character, location, and type of entertainment; the rental terms and license fees paid by them; the extent to which they compete for patronage, and all other business considerations except affiliation of the theatres with a distributor or with a circuit of theatres. If the clearance be found unreasonable, the award shall fix the maximum clearance between the theatres involved, which may be granted in licenses thereafter entered into by a distributor that is party to the arbitration. The award may also fix, subject to the provisions of Section XVII of the consent decree, such maximum clearance under any existing franchise, i.e., a licensing agreement, or a series of licensing agreements, covering more than one motion picture season and covering the exhibition of pictures released by the distributor during the entire period of the agreement. Nothing contained in this subdivision, nor any award in arbitration, shall restrict the exhibitor's right to license for any theatre any run which it is able to negotiate, nor shall restrict the distributor's right to license any run which it desires to grant, nor to license the exhibition of any special feature under a contract the terms of which, including provisions for clearance, are applicable only thereto.

(7) Controversies arising upon a complaint by an independent exhibitor that a distributor defendant has arbitrarily refused to license its features for exhibition on the run requested by the exhibitor in one of the latter's theatres shall be subject to arbitration, but the making of any award is to be subject to certain specified conditions and no award made shall affect the license to exhibit any features then under license, but only future licenses.

(8) For three years after the entry of the decree, the consenting defendants are to notify the Department of Justice of any legally binding commitment for the acquisition of any theatre or theatres. During such period, each defendant is to report monthly the changes in its theatre position, together with a statement for the reason of such changes. For three years following the entry of the decree, no consenting defendant shall enter upon a general program of expanding its theatre holdings. Nothing shall prevent any such defendant from acquiring theatres or interests therein to protect its investment or its competitive position or for ordinary purposes of its business.

(9) The decree shall not be construed to limit, impair or alter the right of a distributor to license the exhibition of motion pictures, subject to such terms as may be satisfactory to it, (a) in any theatre in which, or in the proceeds of which, it is directly or indirectly interested; (b) in any theatre an interest in which of not less than 50% is acquired after the date of the decree and which it owns at the time of such license, and (c) in any theatre of which a company in which the defendant owned not less than 42% of the common stock at the date of the decree and at the time of such license acquires after the date of the decree and owns at the time of such license a financial interest of not less than 50%.

(10) Except as otherwise expressly and specifically provided in the decree, nothing therein shall be construed to limit the right of any distributor to select its own customers, bargain with them in accordance with law, or negotiate with or license to or accept any offer from any exhibitor to license its motion pictures or any number thereof, upon such terms and conditions as it deems advisable or to its best interests.

(11) For a period of three years after the entry of the consent decree the plaintiff shall not seek either in this or any other action against the consenting defendants to divorce the production or distribution of motion pictures from their exhibition or to dissolve any defendant or any corporation in which it has directly or indirectly a substantial stock interest and which is engaged in the exhibition of motion pictures, or holds directly or indirectly a substantial stock interest in any corporation so engaged, or to dissolve or break up any circuit of theatres of any such defendant or of any such corporation, or to require any such defendant, corporation or circuit to divest itself of its interests or any thereof in motion picture theatres in which it had an interest at the time of the entry of the decree.

(12) The method and conditions of and the procedure for the arbitration of controversies and the powers of an appeal board created by the court to entertain appeals from the arbitration tribunal are set forth in the decree.

(13) Jurisdiction is retained by the decree for the purpose of enabling any parties to apply to the court at any time more than three years after the date of the entry for any modification thereof.

The three minor defendants and their subsidiaries did not consent to the decree of November 20, 1940, presumably because of their opposition to the provisions requiring trade-showing and prohibiting block-booking of groups of more than five films. It was provided that if the plaintiff did not secure the entry of a decree against the three minor defendants before June 1, 1942, the consenting defendants were to be released from those provisions. Such a decree was in fact not entered by the specified date, and accordingly the sections of the decree regarding trade-showing and block-booking have lapsed. Nevertheless, according to the testimony, the consenting defendants have continued to comply with them.[1]

[1] The following are definitions of terms used in this opinion:

Block-booking—The practice of licensing, or offering for license, one feature, or group of features, upon condition that the exhibitor shall also license another feature or group of features released by the distributor during a given period.

Clearance—The period of time, usually stipulated in license contracts, which must elapse between runs of the same picture within a particular area or in specified theatres.

Exchange District—An area in which an office is maintained by a distributor for the purpose of soliciting license agreements for the exhibition of its pictures in theatres situated throughout the territory served by the exchange and for the physical distribution of such films throughout this territory.

Feature—Any motion picture, regardless of topic, the length of the film of which is in excess of 4000 feet.

Formula Deal—A licensing agreement with a circuit of theatres in which the rental price of a given film is measured for the circuit as a whole by a specified percentage of the picture's national gross.

Franchise—A licensing agreement, or series of licensing agreements, entered into as part of the same transaction, in effect for more than one motion picture season and covering the exhibition of pictures released by one distributor during the entire period of the agreement.

Independent—A producer, distributor, or exhibitor, as the context requires, which is not a defendant in this action or a subsidiary or affiliate of a defendant.

Master Agreement—A licensing agreement, also known as a "blanket deal", covering the exhibition of films in a number of theatres, usually comprising a circuit.

Motion Picture Season—A one-year period beginning about September 1 of each year.

Counsel for the five major defendants and their subsidiaries contend that the consent decree has, in some respects at least, the effect of a final judgment which may not be modified. But we cannot see how such a position in consistent with the language of Section XXIII (d), which permits "* * * any of the parties to this decree to apply to the Court at any time more than three years after the date of the entry of the decree for any modification thereof." That period has expired, and therefore everything relating to rights under and remedies for violation of the Sherman Act is, therefore, open for consideration, even as between consenting parties; and certainly nothing has hitherto been decided which affected the non-consenting parties. It would seem to follow that we cannot bind any parties to subject themselves to the arbitration system or the board of appeals set up in aid of it without their consent, even though we may regard it as desirable that such a system, in view of its demonstrated usefulness, should be continued in aid of the decree which we propose to direct.

The evidence has established various infractions of the Sherman Act on the part of each of the defendants which we shall proceed to discuss.

Price-fixing.

The defendants who have granted moving picture licenses have fixed minimum admission prices which the exhibitor agrees to charge irrespective of whether it is to pay a flat rental or a percentage of the theatre receipts. It is said that these minimum admission prices are in general only those currently charged by the exhibitors and that they are placed in the licenses in order to assure the distributor of a minimum revenue when it licenses upon a percentage basis, and also to assure a continuation of the conditions which moved it to grant a given run to the exhibitor.[2] Whatever the reason, the various licensing defendants have agreed with their licensees to a system which determines minimum admission prices in all theatres where motion pictures licensed by them are exhibited. In this way are controlled the prices to be charged for most of the motion pictures exhibited either by the defendants, or by independents, within the United States. That the eight defendants distribute most of the features is evident from the record. For example, during the 1943-44 season the eight defendants distributed about 77.6% of all features nationally distributed except "westerns" and low cost productions, and even if the latter inferior and non-competitive pictures are included, they distributed 65.5%. See Plaintiff's Exh. 426; Record p. 2400. The control of distribution closely resembles that appearing in Goldman Theatres, Inc. v. Loew's, Inc., 150 F. 2d 738, 744-5 (C.C.A. 3), where the court said:

Road-show—A public exhibition of a motion picture in a limited number of theatres, in advance of its general release, at admission prices higher than those customarily charged in first-run theatres in the areas where they are located.

Runs—The successive exhibitions of a motion picture in a given area, first-run being the first exhibition in that area, second-run being the next subsequent, and so on.

> "Defendants control the production and distribution of more than 80% of feature pictures in this country, and no exhibitor can successfully operate without access to defendants' product."[3]

[2] That the distributor-defendants have more than merely a passive interest, as they claim, in the maintenance of specified minimum prices is shown by their inclusion in the licenses of provisions for severe penalties if less than those prices are charged. Some licenses provide that if the schedule of minimum prices is violated, all existing licenses of the distributor for that theatre may be cancelled at the option of the distributor; other licenses provide that the particular license may be cancelled or that the exhibitor's clearance over subsequent runs be greatly reduced. See Plaintiff's Exhibits 275-290.

[3] The defendants in the Goldman case were substantially the same as those here, except that Universal Corporation was there eliminated by agreement.

Such combinations we hold to be forbidden by the Sherman Act.

The exhibits submitted in this case contain numerous express agreements between the various distributing defendants and their licensees stating the minimum admission prices which licensees are required to maintain in showing the distributors' pictures in the areas concerned. The agreements are not only between the distributor-defendants and other defendants owning theatres, but also between the distributor-defendants and independent theatre owners. A correlation of these agreements shows that in many instances the minimum prices set forth in the license agreements by the various defendants are in substantial conformity. Indeed, it is conceded in the joint brief filed on behalf of Loew's, Paramount, Warner, RKO and Twentieth Century-Fox that the admission prices included in licenses of the various distributor-defendants are in general uniform, being the usual admission prices currently charged by the exhibitors. At pages 31-2 of the joint brief it is stated:

> "The testimony shows that it is the general practice of all the distributors, whether dealing with independent exhibitors or affiliated ones, to include a provision in the license agreement that the exhibitor shall not charge less than a specified minimum admission price during the exhibition of the particular picture or pictures licensed. * * * The minimum admission price included in the license is not one which the distributor dictates, but is the usual admission price currently charged by the exhibitor. (R. 433, 718, 968, 999, 1382-3). It is the practice of exhibitors to charge the same scale of admission prices over a period of time and not to change them according to whose pictures are being exhibited or according to any fluctuations in the type of picture."

A similar statement is made at page 18 of the brief of Columbia, and the brief of United Artists and Universal appears to argue on the same assumption at pages 24-39.

It does not seem important whether the distributor was the more controlling factor in determining the minimum admission prices. Whether it was such a factor or merely acceded to the customary prices of the exhibitors, in either event there was a general arrangement of fixing prices in which both distributors and exhibits were involved. But it is plain that the distributor did more than accede to existing price schedules.[4] The licenses required them to be maintained under severe penalties for infraction, and the evidence shows that the distributors in the case of exceptional features, where not satisfied with current prices, would refuse to grant licenses unless the prices were raised.[5] More-

* * * * *

"Q. Why would you be interested in the minimum admission price or the admission price charged by the exhibitor in connection with determining what run you would negotiate for? A. Because the admission price that he charges determines the film rental that I can earn for my pictures." Record pp. 718-9.

See also testimony of Kupper in charge of distribution organization of RKO. Record p. 1084.

"Q. Are there occasional instances of special attractions where there is a negotiation as to a higher admission price with the distributor? A. That has come up on several occasions. In the case of the picture 'Woodrow Wilson', and several other pictures, they have been released by the distributors as road show attractions, and in those cases the distributors insisted upon road show prices, and it was the option of the purchaser, or the theatre, to buy or not to buy those pictures at those prices; but if he expected to play the picture at that time, he would have to charge such admission price.

"Q. And if he was not willing to advance his admission price to meet the distributor's terms, he had the opportunity to play this picture on regular run, is that right? A. At a later date, that is correct.

"Q. Is the provision for that minimum admission price included not only in license contracts for first-run exhibition but also for subsequent-run exhibition? A. Yes, I think it applies in all cases.

"Q. Is it included in license contracts for percentage pictures and also for flat rental pictures? A. Yes, sir.

over, the distributors, when licensing on a percentage basis, were interested in the prices charged and even when licensing for a flat rental were interested in admission prices to be charged for subsequent runs which they might license on a percentage basis. Likewise all of the five major defendants had a definite interest in keeping up prices in any given terirtory in which they owned theatres, and this interest they were safeguarding by fixing minimum prices in their licenses when distributing their films to independent exhibitors in those areas. Even if the licenses were at a flat rate, a failure to require their licensees to maintain fixed prices would leave them free by lowering the current charge to decrease through competition the income in the licensors' own theatres in the neighborhood. The whole system presupposed a fixing of prices by all parties concerned in all competitive areas.

The similarity of specified minimum prices prescribed for the same theatres in the distributor-defendants' contracts of license is shown by the following table collated from exhibits in evidence.[6] The exhibits used to prepare

"Q. Where the admission price is included for subsequent-run exhibition, does your answer with respect to who determines the admission price apply to that as well? A. That is correct. But, of course, it is reasonable to assume, to understand, that in setting our admission prices, we do not do that on an arbitrary basis because it is reasonable to expect that the larger theatres playing the first-runs would get the maximum price for the protection of the distributor and the producer. And in the secondary houses the prices are less.

"Q. That is, generally speaking, the first-run houses charge a higher price than subsequent-run, and then the prices step down among the runs? A. That is correct." Record p. 1000.

[6] This table is derived from Plaintiff's Exhibits 41, 42, 57 (1-49), 82, 94, 126,-127, 128, 139, 365, 369. In most of the exhibits there was no indication as to whether the admission price given included or excluded taxes. When this information was given in the exhibits, it is stated in the table as "tax incl.", or "tax excl." The word "none" is used to mean that though a license was in evidence, no admission price was specifically stated in the contract, either through inadvertence or on the understanding that the admission prices currently being charged or contained in previous licenses would be continued. Record pp. 433, 724, 782, 1082, 1211. The symbol "x" is used to indicate that no license of that distributor for that particular theatre was in evidence.

the table contained answers of the defendants to plaintiff's interrogatories about the first block of five features licensed for the 1943-44 season by each of the five major distributor-defendants, and about the first five pictures licensed by each of the three minor defendants, and about that picture of each defendant which during the season received the most billings in the United States.

It is apparent from the foregoing that there was great similarity and in many cases identity in the minimum prices fixed for the same theatre in the licenses of all the defendants. Where there was a marked difference in price, as for example in the admissions specified by RKO, Columbia and Universal, in a theatre in Charleston, South Carolina, it is likely to have been due to the showing of a picture of a different class from the others, or upon a different run.

Such uniformity of action spells a deliberately unlawful system, the existence of which is not dispelled by the testimony of interested witnesses that one distributor does not know what another distributor is doing; and there can, in our opinion, be no reasonable inference that the defendants are not all planning to fix minimum prices to which their licensees must adhere. See Record p. 1322.

In addition, several of the exhibits disclose operating agreements between the five distributor-defendants who are also theatre owners, or between them and independent theatre owners in which joint operation of the theatres covered by the agreements is provided and minimum admission prices to be charged are either stated therein, or are to be jointly determined by other means. Apparently those particular price-fixing agreements do not involve the three minor defendants or their subsidiaries. For example, in Plaintiff's Exh. 220 there are agreements between subsidiaries of Loew's and Warner, covering the period of May 5, 1938 to August 31, 1947, according to which the admission prices for three theatres in Pittsburgh—two of Warner and one of Loew's—are to be fixed by a joint committee. In Plaintiff's Exh. 218, an agreement between Warner and Paramount provides that from March 1, 1936, to August 31, 1953, two theatres previously operated by Warner, and one theatre previously operated by Paramount in Hammond, Indiana, should be managed by Warner Bros. Circuit Management Corporation and the then present scale of admission prices maintained. By other agreements in Plaintiff's Exh. 219, RKO and Warner provided for joint operation from August 27, 1937, to August 31, 1950, of five theatres in Cleveland—three of RKO and two of Warner—for which minimum prices are to be determined by a joint operating committee. See also, e.g., Plaintiff's Exh. 229 (Warner and independent); Exh. 213 (Loew's and independents); Exh. 202 (RKO and independent); Exhs. 226, 226a (Paramount, Warner, and independent); Exh. 223 (Warner and independent); Exh. 386 (Paramount, RKO and independent); Exhs. 238, 239 (Fox and independents); Exh. 387 (Paramount, RKO and independent); Exh. 206 (RKO and Paramount); Exh. 221 (Warner and Paramount); Exh. 209 (RKO and Paramount); Exh. 205 (Paramount and independent). These agreements show the express intent of the major defendants to maintain prices at artificial levels.

As further evidence of a conspiracy among the distributors to fix prices, we find master agreements and franchises between various of the defendants in their capacities as distributors and various of the defendants in their capacities as exhibitors. These contracts stipulate minimum admission prices often for dozens of theatres owned by an exhibitor-defendant in a particular area of the United States.

Loew's as distributor, for example, fixed minimum prices for nearly all of Paramount's 133 theatres in Florida in an agreement covering the 1943-44 season. Plaintiff's Exh. 57 (11). In the Chicago area Loew's again as distributor specified prices in a single agreement for upwards of 50 theatres owned by a Paramount subsidiary, Balaban & Katz Corporation. Plaintiff's Exhs. 250, 173. United Artists as distributor also specified prices for the Balaban & Katz theatres in Chicago for the 1941-42 season. Plaintiff's Exh. 369 (6). Similarly Loew's specified prices for the entire Warner circuit of theatres for the 1943-44 season, Plaintiff's Exh. 57 (8-10, 21-2, 30, 32, 35, 38, 48); for the same season United Artists specified prices for five RKO theatres in Cincinnati, Plaintiff's Exh. 274; Paramount for seven RKO theatres in Cincinnati, Plaintiff's Exh. 240; Loew's for the same seven RKO theatres in Cincinnati, Plaintiff's Exh. 248; Warner for forty or more RKO theatres in Greater New York, Plaintiff's Exh. 126; Loew's for six Fox theatres in Los Angeles County, Plaintiff's Exh. 249; Warner for subsequent run Paramount theatres in Detroit and Birmingham, Michigan, Plaintiff's Exh. 244.

A master agreement between United Artists as distributor and Fox as exhibitor for the season 1938-39 covered distribution of pictures of five independent producers in Fox theatre circuits in Los Angeles, San Francisco, Salt Lake City, St. Louis, Milwaukee, Omaha, Denver, and other cities, all on a percentage basis. It contained the following clause:

> "Where pictures are licensed on a percentage rental basis the scale of admission prices to be not less than the scale of admission prices charged to view pictures of comparable quality exhibited by the exhibitor and distributed by distributors other than United Artists."

The foregoing quotation shows an acquiescence of United Artists in admission prices fixed by any other distributor and an adherence to those prices in its own licenses. Plaintiff's Exh. 199.

A franchise agreement between Universal Corporation as distributor and Interstate Theatres, Inc., and Texas Consolidated Theatres, Inc., for the seasons 1941-44 is similar. Plaintiff's Exh. 261. In each of the two latter companies Paramount had a 50% interest. The franchise covered pictures distributed by Universal to the theatres of the two licensees and contained the ordinary provisions for penalties if minimum admission prices were not maintained. See note 2 supra. While no minimum prices were specified in the agreements it is not really questioned that in such circumstances the current prices were implied as part of the contract. See Record pp. 433, 724, 782, 1082, 1210-11.

There is also in evidence a franchise agreement between Columbia Pictures Corporation as distributor and Marcus Loew Booking Agency, a Loew's subsidiary, for the seasons 1944-46 covering pictures distributed to Loew's metropolitan New York Circuit. Plaintiff's Exh. 471. Minimum admission prices were not specified, but, as in other cases, were implied.

Licenses granted by one defendant to another for exhibition in only one theatre, while less striking evidence of conspiracy than the above master agreements and franchises, disclose the same inter-relationship among the defendants. Each of the five major defendants as a theatre-owning exhibitor has been licensed by the other seven defendants as distributors to exhibit the pictures of the latter at specified minimum prices. RKO, for example, as a theatre-owner, has been granted licenses with price restrictions by the other defendant-distributors. In turn, RKO, being itself a distributor, has granted similar licenses to the other four exhibiting defendants. We think that RKO, Loew's, Warner, Paramount and Fox, in granting and accepting licenses with minimum prices specified, have among themselves engaged in a national system to fix prices, and that Columbia, Universal and United Artists, in requiring the maintenance of minimum prices in their licenses granted to these exhibitor-defendants, have participated in that system.

It is a reasonable inference from all the foregoing that the distributor-defendants have acquiesced in the establishment of a price-fixing system and have conspired with one another to maintain prices. Such a conspiracy is per se a violation of the Sherman Act. Ethyl Gasoline Corp. v. United States, 309 U. S. 436; United States v. Frankfort Distilleries, Inc., 324 U. S. 293; United States v. Masonite Corp., 316 U. S. 265.

Moreover, irrespective of the conspiracy among distributors to which we have referred, each distributor-defendant has illegally combined with its licensees, for in agreeing to maintain a stipulated minimum admission price, each exhibitor thereby consents to the minimum price level at which it will compete against other licensees of the same distributor whether they exhibit on the same run or not. The total effect is that through the separate contracts between the distributor and its licensees a price structure is erected which regulates the licensees' ability to compete against one another in admission prices. Each licensee knows from the general uniformity of admission price practices that other licensees having theatres suitable for exhibition of a distributor's picture in the particular competitive area will also be restricted as to maintenance of minimum prices, and this acquiescence of the exhibitors in the distributor's control of price competition renders the whole a conspiracy between each distributor and its licensees. An effective system of price control in which the distributor and its licensees knowingly take part by entering into price-restricting contracts is thereby created. That the combination is made up of a sum of separate licensing contracts, individually executed, does not affect its illegality, for tacit participation in a general scheme of control prices is as violative of the Sherman Act as an explicit agreement. Interstate Circuit v. United States, 306 U. S. 208; United States v. Masonite Corp., 316 U. S. 265; Goldman Theatres, Inc. v. Loew's Inc., 150 F. 2d 738 (C.C.A. 3).

This practice of stipulating minimum admission prices in the contracts of license is illegal in another respect. The differentials in price set by a distributor in licensing a particular picture in theatres exhibiting on different runs in the same competitive area are calculated to encourage as many patrons as possible to see the picture in the prior-run theatres where they will pay higher prices than in the subsequent runs. The reason for this is that if 10,000 people of a city's population are ultimately to see the picture—no matter on what run—the gross revenue to be realized from their patronage is increased relatively to the increase in numbers seeing it in the higher-priced prior-run theatres. In effect, the distributor, by the fixing of minimum prices, attempts to give the prior-run exhibitors as near a monopoly of the patronage as possible. This, we believe, to be in violation of §2 of the Sherman Act, at least when the distributor's own theatres are not exhibiting its picture on a prior-run and it is to theatres other than its own that it attempts to give a monopoly.

It is argued that the practice of minimum admission price-fixing is permitted under the Copyright Act. But that act has never been held to sanction a conspiracy among licensors and licensees artifically to maintain prices. We do not question that the Copyright Act permits the owner of a copyrighted picture to exhibit it in its own theatres upon such terms as it sees fit, nor need we now decide whether a copyright owner may lawfully fix admission prices to be charged by a single independent exhibitor for the exhibition of its film, if other licensors and exhibitors are not in contemplation. Interstate Circuit v. United States, 306 U. S. 208; cf. United States v. General Electric Co., 272 U. S. 476. As other licensors and exhibitors are always in contemplation, so far as we can see, the question would appear academic.

pany—was involved, and, therefore, no conspiracy which sought to amplify the rights of the licensor under the Patent Act. The other question involved in that case was whether a patentee might lawfully require its bona fide agents to maintain minimum prices in selling the former's patented articles. The court held that it could. There is no claim here, however, that the exhibitors as licensees under the distributors' copyrights are agents in any sense, and we do not see that such a claim could be made. In any event, United States v. Masonite Corp., 316 U. S. 265, involved facts closely analogous to those here and affords ample basis for our decision.

Some argument has been made that the defendants' fixing of minimum admission prices is exempted from operation of the Sherman Act by the Miller-Tydings Amendment to that act, 50 Stat. 693 (1937), 15 U.S.C.A. §1 (1940). The amendment pertains, however, only to "contracts or agreements prescribing minimum prices for the resale of a commodity", and the undisputed evidence is that the distributors merely grant licenses to the exhibitors for exhibition of their films and that title to none of their films at any time passes to the exhibitors. Furthermore, the distributor-defendants have engaged in a conspiracy, and the amendment explicitly states that despite its other provisions, contracts or agreements between "persons, firms, or corporations in competition with each other" to establish or maintain minimum prices remain illegal. United States v. Frankfort Distilleries, Inc., 324 U. S. 293; United States v. Bausch & Lomb Co., 321 U. S. 707; United States v. Univis Lens Co., 316 U. S. 241.

The foregoing holding that the defendants have all engaged in unlawful price-fixing does not prevent the distributors from continuing their present methods of determining film rental; they may measure their compensation by stated sums, by a given percentage of a particular theatre's receipts, by a combination of these two, or by any other appropriate means. What is held to be violative of the Sherman Act is not the distributors' devices for measuring rentals, but their fixing of minimum admission prices which automatically regulates the ability of one licensee to compete against another for the patron's dollar and tends to increase such prices as well as profits from exhibition.

If the exhibitors are not restrained by the distributors in the right to fix their own prices, there will be an opportunity for the exhibitors, whether they be affiliates or independents, to compete with one another. This is because one exhibitor by lowering admission prices will be able to compete with other exhibitors in obtaining patrons for his theatre—a competition which may well benefit both exhibitors and the public paying the admission fees.

Clearance and Run.

Among provisions common to the licensing contracts of all the distributor-defendants are those by which the licensor agrees not to exhibit or grant a license to exhibit a certain motion picture before a specified number of days after the last date of the exhibition therein licensed. This so-called period of "clearance" or "protection" is stated in the various licenses in differing ways: in terms of a given period between designated runs, as for example in the Chicago area, Plaintiff's Exh. 369, see Bigelow v. RKO Radio Pictures, Inc., 150 F. 2d 877 (C.C.A. 7), affirmed 326 U.S.—— (February 25, 1946), and as in Washington and New York, Plaintiff's Exhibits 244, 471; in terms of admission prices charged by competing theatres, as "20 days over 30c theatres, 28 days over 25c theatres," Plaintiff's Exhibits 57, 173, 178, 189; in terms of a given period of clearance over specifically named theatres, Plaintiff's Exhibits 94, 181, 242, 253, 259; in terms of so many days' clearance over specified areas or towns, Plaintiff's Exhibits 126, 175, 182, 182A, 183, 194, 244, 250, 255, 470, 476; in terms of clearances as fixed by other distributors, Plaintiff's Exhibits 188, 417; or in terms of combinations of these formulae.

It appears to be plaintiff's contention that clearance practices inherently operate to produce unreasonable restrictions of competition among theatres and are therefore per se violative of the Sherman Act. With this we do not agree, for it seems to us that a grant of clearance, when not accompanied by a fixing of minimum prices or not unduly extended as to area or duration, affords a fair protection to the interests of the licensee without unreasonably interfering with the interests of the public. At common law a vendor of income-producing property may validly covenant with his purchaser not to compete for a given time or within a given area so long as the restrictions are reasonably necessary to protect the value of the property purchased. Cincinnati, Portsmouth, Big Sandy and Pomeroy Packet Co. v. Bay, 200 U. S. 179; see Rogers v. Parry, 2 Cro. 326 (K. B. 1613); United States v. Addyston Pipe & Steel Co., 85 Fed. 271 (C. C. A. 6). It is true that licenses of property rather than sales are here concerned and that the distributors covenant not only not to exhibit the films themselves, but also not to license them to others. Nevertheless, we believe these are not differences which affect the applicability of the common-law rule to present case, for licenses between one distributor and one exhibitor with reasonable clearance provisions do not, in our opinion, involve anything unlawful. Such provisions are no more than safeguards against concurrent or subsequent licenses in the same area until the exhibitor whose theatre is involved has had a chance to exhibit the pictures licensed without invasion by a subsequent exhibitor at a lower price. It seems nothing more than an adoption of the common-law rule to restrict subsequent exhibitions for a reasonable time within a reasonable area. While clearance may indirectly affect admission prices, it does not fix them and is, we believe, a reasonable restraint permitted by the Sherman Act. Standard Oil Co. v. United States, 221 U. S. 1; United States v. American Tobacco Co., 221 U. S. 106; Westway Theatre, Inc. v. Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corp., 30 F.

Supp. 830, affirmed on opinion below, 113 F. 2d 932 (C. C. A. 4); see United States v. Masonite Corp., 316 U. S. 265; Ethyl Gasoline Corp. v. United States, 309 U. S. 436.

The cost of each black and white print is from $150 to $300, and of a technicolor print is from $600 to $800. Many of the bookings are for less than the cost of the print so that exhibitions would be confined to the larger high-priced theatres unless a system of successive runs with a reasonable protection for the earlier runs is adopted in the way of clearance.

In Section VIII of the Consent Decree, moreover, there is the explicit statement to which all parties, including the plaintiff, consented.

While, as previously stated, we do not deem ourselves bound by any provision of the consent decree, if we now find that it violates the Sherman Act, the forcefulness of the phrasing of this sentence indicates the proved utility of clearance practices in the movie industry and also their apparent necessity for a reasonable conduct of the business. Indeed, it is practically conceded that exhibitors would find extremely perilous the acceptance of licenses for the exhibition of films without assurance by the distributor that a nearby competitor would not be licensed to show the same film either at the same time or so soon thereafter that the exhibitor's expected income—perhaps on the basis of which he agreed to the specified rental—would be greatly diminished. Moreover, we understand the plaintiff to concede that the licensor may license its pictures for different successive dates. A reasonable clearance is in practical effect much the same. Either a license for successive dates, or one providing for clearance, permits the public to see the picture in a later-exhibiting theatre at lower than prior rates.

Several courts have previously considered the validity of clearances under the Sherman Act and have concluded that in the absence of an unconscionably long time or too extensive an area embraced by the clearance, or a conspiracy of distributors to fix clearances, there was nothing of itself illegal in their use. Westway Theatre, Inc. v. Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corp., 30 F. Supp. 830 (D. Md.), affirmed on opinion below, 113 F. 2d 932 (C. C. A. 4), and unreported cases therein cited; Gary Theatre Co. v. Columbia Pictures Corp., 120 F. 2d 891 (C. C. A. 7), We find the reasoning of these cases persuasive.

It is true that in some instances large theatre circuits by use of their great film-buying power have been able to negotiate successfully with the distributor-defendants for grants of unreasonable clearances or unjustified prior runs for their theatres. United States v. Crescent Amusement Co., 323 U. S. 173; Bigelow v. RKO Radio Pictures, Inc., 150 F. 2d 887 (C. C. A. 7), affirmed 326 U. S. (February 25, 1946); Goldman v. Loew's, 150 F. 2d 738 (C. C. A. 3); United States v. Schine Chain Theatres, Inc., 63 F. Supp. 229 (W. D. N. Y.). While we cannot find sufficient evidence to support an inference that the major defendants here, though controlling some of the largest circuits of theatres in the country and thus possessing potential weapons of great strength, have either collectively or severally entered upon a general policy of discriminating against independents in their grants of clearances, yet they have acquiesced in and forwarded a uniform system of clearances and in numerous instances have maintained unreasonable clearances to the prejudice of independents and perhaps even of affiliates. The decision of such controversies as may arise over clearances should be left to local suits in the area concerned, or, even more appropriately, to litigation before an Arbitration Board composed of men versed in the complexities of this industry.

In determining the reasonableness of the specific clearances which may come before these tribunals, they should consider whether the clearance has been set so as to favor affiliates or control the admission prices of the theatres involved. A distributor will naturally tend to grant a subsequent run to and clearance over a theatre for which the owner of his own volition sets a low admission price, for the distributor will be inclined to seek out the higher priced theatres first where the revenue is likely to be greater and consequently in case of licenses on a percentage basis where a percentage share will be higher. This, however, would seem the inevitable result of the competition for the distributor's films from theatres which are the larger or better equipped, and for which higher admission prices may therefore be charged by their operators. Such competition the lower priced theatres must be prepared to meet, or else be content with subsequent runs and grants of clearance over them. The temptations to the distributor to use clearance grants to force a theatre to raise its prices and thus to qualify for prior runs having less clearance over it, and more clearance over competitors are nevertheless obvious and the courts or arbitration board should guard that this is not done. Clearance should be granted on the basis of theatre conditions which the exhibitor creates, not the distributor. The line to be drawn is indeed indistinct, but its existence is no less real.

In determining whether any clearance complained of is unreasonable, the following factors should be taken into consideration and accorded the importance and weight to which each is entitled, regardless of the order in which they are listed:

(1) The admission prices, as set by the exhibitors, of the theatres involved;

(2) The character and location of the theatres involved, including size, type of entertainment, appointments, transit facilities, etc.;

(3) The policy of operation of the theatres involved, such as the showing of double features, gift nights, give-aways, premiums, cut-rate tickets, lotteries, etc.;

(4) The rental terms and license fees paid by the theatres involved and the revenues derived by the distributor-defendant from such theatres;

(5) The extent to which the theatres involved compete with each other for patronage;

(6) The fact that a theatre involved is affiliated with a defendant-distributor or with an independent circuit of theatres should be disregarded; and

(7) There should be no clearance between theatres not in substantial competition.

The foregoing has been directed to the validity of clearance provisions resulting from separate negotiations between individual distributors and exhibitors in free and open competition with other distributors and exhibitors, and, as stated, we believe their reasonable use to be lawful. It is here claimed by plaintiff, however, that the distributor-defendants have acted in concert in the formation of a uniform system of clearances for the theatres to which they license their films and that the exhibitor-defendants have assisted in creating and have acquiesced in this system. This we find to be the case and hold to be in violation of the Sherman Act.

The following testimony warrants the inference that the defendants, as we found to be the case in the fixing of admission prices, have acted in concert in their grants of run and clearance. William F. Rodgers, general sales manager and vice-president of Loew's, testified that the field managers determine whether a theatre shall be licensed to exhibit on a first or on a subsquent run, that the clearance of a given theatre is more or less historical, except for that of new theatres, and that there has been very little change in clearance over a period of years. Record pp. 542-3. Prior to 1943-44 Loew's license agreements provided that the clearance granted therein should apply to any theatre thereafter opened. Record p. 556.

Charles M. Reagan, vice-president of Paramount in charge of sales, stated that once clearance is agreed upon, it remains the same unless either exhibitor or distributor wants to change it. Record pp. 710-11. There is a difference between a distributor's and an exhibitor's interest in the period of clearance granted. The distributor wants to get the most possible in film rental from all the runs, the exhibitor to get as much clearance over a succeeding run as possible, because he has no interest in any succeeding run. The distributor, however, has a definite interest. Record p. 710. Clearances as granted apply to all pictures regardless of their quality. Record p. 715.

Martin J. Mullen, vice-president of M & P Theatres, a managing co poration which operates a group of New England theatres affiliated with Paramount, said that clearance is generally negotiated each time a license contract is made, but is actually carried along from year to year and generally understood when once established; that originally, before his time, clearance was established as a result of individual negotiations and followed along the same lines as they were with some changes. Record p. 968. All defendants grant the same clearance to the same theatre. Record p. 977.

John J. Friedl, president and general manager of the Minnesota Amusement Company, a wholly-owned subsidiary of Paramount, said that he generally got from the various distributors the same clearance for the particular theatre for which he is negotiating; that while clearance is negotiated with each license, it generally remains the same, and the same clearance is granted by distributor-defendants and non-defendants alike, Record p. 1003; that clearance is pretty well established, and it is definitely followed in all cases. Record p. 1013.

Morton J. Thalheimer, an independent theatre exhibitor in Richmond, Virginia, called as a witness by Fox, testified that clearance was in effect in Richmond when he first went into business, and it seemed perfectly normal and natural that it should remain that way; that it protects his first-run against his own sub-runs and against his competitors' sub-runs. Record p. 1384. To his knowledge, the system of clearances had existed in Richmond for over nineteen years, during which time there had not been any change. Record p. 1401.

Harold J. Fitzgerald, president of Fox Wisconsin Theatres, Inc., operating sixty-six motion picture theaters in Wisconsin and Michigan, a wholly owned subsidiary of the defendant National Theatres Corporation, testified by affidavit that the situation with respect to the licensing of films, and the runs and clearances involved, were much the same in 1928 as they are today, Record p. 1973; that licensing arrangements were vital to distributor and exhibitor and that clearance obviously had a definite effect upon the capacity of his corporation to secure patronage at its top admission price. If Fox Wisconsin undertook to pay a distributor the film rental based upon a high percentage of gross, it would be interested in clearance over any neighborhood theatre which the distributor might license on a competing subsequent run. Generally negotiations as to clearance do not take place with respect to each block of pictures licensed because once a fair and reasonable clearance has been determined by the distributor and exhibitor it tends to become fixed, and ordinarily will be the same in a series of contracts in the absence of any unchanged circumstances and conditions. Record p. 1983.

Benjamin Kalmenson, sales manager of Warner Bros. Distributors Corporation, testified that clearances have been pretty well set through the country for a great many years, and are "acquiesced in by exhibitors, producers, independents, affiliates and everybody, until there has grown up a kind of system of clearance." Record p. 1506.

Robert Mochrie, general sales manager of RKO Radio Pictures, Inc., stated upon his examination that RKO in determining the length of clearance between theatres, takes into consideration the amount of clearance which in its opinion will yield it the largest revenue, taking all theatres into account as a whole and subject to a clearance condition that has built itself up in the city over a period of time. In negotiating licenses, there is frequent occasion to give consideration to the existing clearance between theatres, but they do not consider it anew each time because the factors which determined it originally at some past time remain stable from year to year. He said there are no general or frequent instances in his practice of clearances different in some particular city from those granted by a co-defendant. He usually knows what clearances other distributors are granting. His customer usually tells him what clearance he wants, which is what he is getting from other distributors. He has no agreements with other distributors that he will adopt the same clearance, and his explanation as to why in some instances the clearances granted by RKO to a prior run theatre is the same as a clearance granted by one or more other distributors serving the same theatre is that clearance has been the outgrowth in time between those two theatres, and the exhibitor buys such products on such a clearance basis and offers the witness the same. Record pp. 1714-5.

Abraham Montague, general sales manager of Columbia, testified that in negotiating deals, the "clearance is something we usually find when we arrive there, and we usually negotiate our deal within the clearance we find"; that it would be impracticable and impossible to set up new clearance. Record p. 1268. His company keeps a record of clearances in the community. Record p. 1347. Where his company grants clearance to one theatre over another, it usually follows the pattern set by clearance that is given by other major distributors as well as those which are not majors. He usually does not make any independent determination of whether the clearance is reasonable or unreasonable. He takes it as he finds it, and finding it in most cases standardized, his company does not feel that it is strong enough to change it. Record pp. 1376-7.

Paul N. Lazarus, manager of the contract department of United Artists, testified that clearances are "generally understood, and they follow along their established custom." Record p. 1440. For testimony of other witnesses to the same effect as the foregoing, see Record pp. 2012, 2043, 2049, 2086, 2110-11.

The fixed character of clearances and the uniformity of the distributor-defendants' practice with reference thereto are shown by the exhibits, as well as the testimony. Many of the franchises, master agreements, and so-called "formula deals" which are in evidence provide that clearances shall be the same as those in effect on the date of the agreement. See Plaintiff's Exhibits 419A (RKO and independent); 419B (RKO and Paramount); 241 (Paramount and Fox); 172 (Paramount and Loew's); 473 (RKO and Universal); 245 Warner and Fox); 251 (Fox and Paramount); 254 (Fox and RKO). Some of the agreements establish clearances for more than a season. See Plaintiff's Exhibits 181 (3 years, Loew's and Warner); 187 (3 years, Loew's and Fox); 249 (9 years, Loew's and Fox); 259 (3 years, Warner and Universal). Others provide that the clearance is to be no less favorable to the exhibitor than that which had been granted by the distributor for the previous season or in the preceding agreement. See Plaintiff's Exhibits 265, 472 (Columbia and Fox); 190 (RKO and Fox); 199, 272A, 383 (United Artists and Fox).

In some of the agreements, the clearance therein stated was also to be granted to all theatres which the exhibitor-party to the contract might thereafter own, lease, control, manage, or operate. See Plaintiff's Exhibits 172 (Paramount and Loew's); 266, 266A (Columbia and Warner); 471 (Columbia and Loew's); 192 (Fox and Warner). Moreover, the license forms for 1936-7 of Paramount, Fox, Loew's, Warner, RKO, Columbia and Universal, and for 1943-44 of Paramount, Warner, Columbia and Universal, each contain a provision identical or similar to the following:

"If clearance is granted against a named theatre or theatres indicating that it is the intention of the Distributor to grant such clearance against all theatres in the immediate vicinity of the Exhibitor's theatre then unless otherwise provided in the schedule, such clearance shall include any theatre in such vicinity thereafter erected or opened. See Plaintiff's Exhibits 275, 277, 279-81, 283-6, 289-90.

It is clear that the purpose of these two types of clearance agreements was to fix the run and clearance status of any theatre thereafter opened, not on the basis of its appointments, size, location, and other competitive factors normally entering into such a determination, but rather upon the sole basis of whether it were operated by the exhibitor-party to the agreement.

Much that has been said about clearances is applicable also to runs; the two are practically alike. Clearances are given to protect a particular run against a subsequent run, and the practice of clearance is so closely allied with that of run as to make comment on the one applicable to the other.

Rodgers, of Loew's testified that a run usually remains static for a given theatre, Record p. 421, and he determines what runs shall be "offered" to an exhibitor. Record p. 418. The size of the theatre does not necessarily determine whether it is satisfactory for operation on a first run. Record p. 566.

Reagan, of Paramount, said that negotiations with an exhibitor are "usually conducted on the basis of a particular run." In the case of a new theatre, the distributor usually considers whether it wants to do business on the run the theatre would like.[1] In the New York area, second runs are sold by him only to Loew's and RKO. Record pp. 815-16.

The evidence we have referred to shows that both independent distributors and exhibitors when attempting to bargain with the defendants have been met by a fixed scale of clearances, runs, and admission prices to which they have been obliged to conform if they wished to get their pictures shown upon satisfactory runs or were to compete in exhibition either with the defendants' theatres or with theatres to which the latter have licensed their pictures. Under the circumstances disclosed in the record there has been no fair chance for either the present or any future licensees to change a situation sanctioned by such effective control and general acquiescence as have obtained. See Bigelow v. RKO Radio Pictures, Inc., 150 F. 2d 877 (C. C. A. 7), affirmed 326 U. S. (February 25, 1946); Goldman v. Loew's, Inc., 150 F. 2d 738 (C. C. A. 3); Youngclaus v. Omaha Film Board of Trade, 60 F. 2d 538 (D. C. Neb.). The only way competition may be introduced into the present system of fixed prices, clearances, and runs is to require a defendant when licensing its pictures to other exhibitors to make each picture available at a minimum fixed or percentage rental and (if clearance is desired) to grant a reasonable clearance and run. When so offered, the licensor shall grant the license for the desired run to the highest bidder if such bidder is responsible and has a theatre of a size, location, and equipment to present the picture to advantage. In other words, if two theatres are bidding and are fairly comparable the one offering the best terms shall receive the license. Thus price fixing among the licensors or between a licensor and its licensees as well as the non-competitive clearance system may be terminated, and the requirements of the Sherman Act, which the present system violates, will be adequately met. The administrative details involved in such changes will require further consideration. We are satisfied that existing arrangements are in derogation of the rights of independent distributors, exhibitors, and the public, and that the proposed changes will tend to benefit them all.

Formula Deals, Master Agreements, and Franchises.

Formula deals, certain master agreements, and franchises have tended to restrain trade in the distribution and exhibition of motion picture features and in view of the history and relation to the moving picture business of the various parties to this action have exercised unreasonable restraints. In our opinion these restraints will be obviated or at least sufficiently mitigated by requiring a distributor wishing its pictures to be shown outside of its own theatres to offer to license each picture to all theatres desiring to show it on a particular run and, if the theatres are responsibly owned and otherwise adequate, to grant the desired run to the highest bidder.

Formula deals have been entered into by Paramount and by RKO with independent and affiliated circuits. By such agreements a particular circuit has been licensed to exhibit a certain feature in all its theatres at a specified percentage of the national gross receipts realized from that feature by all theatres in the United States. The circuit may allocate playing time and film rentals among the various theatres as it sees fit. See Plaintiff's Exhibits 241, 419A, 419B. Arrangements whereby all the theatres of a circuit are included in a single agreement, and no opportunity is afforded for other theatre owners to bid for the picture in their several areas, seriously and as we hold unreasonably restrain competition. These formula deals have been negotiated without, so far as we are informed, any competition on the part of independent theatre owners who would labor under a great disadvantage in attempting severally to match or outbid the offers of a circuit that was making offers for all of its theatres.

Certain master agreements are open to the same objection as formula deals, for they cover exhibition in two or more theatres in a particular circuit and allow the exhibitor to allocate the film rental paid among the theatres as it sees fit and also to exhibit the features upon such playing time as it deems best, and leaves other terms to the circuit's discretion. See, e.g., Plaintiff's Exhibits 196, 251, 267, 270, 270A, 273, 476. These are different from some other master agreements in which there are separate provisions covering the licensing of the picture for each particular theatre. See, e.g., Plaintiff's Exhibits 182, 182A, 189, 190, 191 248. These later agreements in effect only combine in one document a number of theatres with proper licenses for each. This may be done if there is an opportunity for exhibitors to bid for the same runs at an offered price.

Franchises which so far as the five major defendants are concerned were forbidden by the consent decree are also objectionable because they cover too long periods (more than one season) and also because they embrace all the pictures released by a given distributor. They necessarily contravene the plan of licensing each picture, theatre by theatre, to the highest bidder.

It is true that a prohibition of formula deals, master agreements and franchises will interfere with certain contracts which have been made in the past but their formation was a restraint upon trade which was unlawful at the time they were made, and therefore should not be continued. We see no reason to hold that the failure to bring in to this suit one of the contracting parties prevents the issue of an injunction forbidding one who is a party to the suit from continuing to carry out an arrangement which causes unlawful restraints. While our decision will not be res judicata as to those not parties to the litigation, the parties are necessarily and properly bound, and indeed the decision is a judicial precedent against the others on the questions of law involved in those situations we have referred to where they have unreasonably restrained trade and commerce.

In our opinion it follows from the foregoing that provisions in license agreements known as moveovers which give to a licensee the privilege of exhibiting a given picture in a second theatre as a continuation of a run in a first theatre are incompatible with the system we have prescribed of bidding for pictures and runs theatre by theatre. The same would seem to be true of so-called overage-and-underage provisions which are often inserted in licenses to permit an exhibitor owning a number of theatres to apply a deficit in the playing time in one or more others. Under such provisions it is not possible to determine the amount payable for the account of one theatre until the performances in the others have been completed, or practically to apply the bidding system we are establishing. But provisions in licenses for "extended" or "repeat" runs in the same theatre, though apparently criticized by the government, would not seem to be objectionable if reasonably limited in time when other exhibitors are given the opportunity to bid for similar licenses. Likewise, any other license provisions which may be called to our attention that would substantially interfere with the effectiveness of the bidding system would have to be revised and perhaps may have to be specially dealt with in the decree to follow this opinion.

Block-booking and Blind-selling.

For many years the distributor-defendants licensed their films in "blocks", or indivisible groups, before they had been actually produced. In such cases the only knowledge prospective exhibitors had of the films which they had contracted for was from a description of each picture by title, plot, and players. In many cases licenses for all the films had to be accepted in order to obtain any, though sometimes the exhibitor was given a right of subsequent cancellation for a certain number of pictures. Because of complaints of block-booking and blind-selling based upon the supposed unfairness of contracts which often included pictures—the inferior quality of which could not be known. Sections III and IV of the consent decree required the five consenting distributors to trade-show their films before offering them for license and limited the number which might be included in any contract to five. More than one block of five however could be licensed where the contents of any had been trade-shown. While this restriction in the consent decree has now ceased by time limitation, the consent distributors have continued to observe the restriction. The non-assenting distributors have retained up to the present time their previous methods of licensing in blocks, but have allowed their customers considerable freedom to cancel the license as to a percentage of the pictures contracted for.

The plaintiff argues that the Sherman Act forbids block-booking in toto. This is said to be because it is illegal to condition the licensing of one film upon the acceptance of another, and it therefore can make no difference whether the group of films involved in a license be two or forty. In our opinion this contention is sound, and any form of block-booking is illegal by which an exhibitor, in order to obtain a license for one or more films, must accept a license for one or more other films.

A patentee who has granted a license in consideration that the patented invention shall be used by the licensee only with unpatented material furnished by the licenser may not restrain as a contributory infringer one who sells to the licensee like materials for like use. Mercoid Corp. v. Mid-Continent Investment Co., 320 U. S. 661; Mercoid Corp. v. Minneapolis-Honeywell Regulator Co., 320 U. S. 680; Morton Salt Co. v. G. S. Suppiger, 314 U. S. 488, 491; Motion Picture Patents Co. v. Universal Film Mfg. Co., 243 U. S. 502; Carbice Corp. v. American Patents Corp., 283 U. S. 27; Leitch Mfg. Co. v. Barber Co., 302 U. S. 458. Moreover, as was said in Mercoid Corp. v. Mid-Continent Co., 320 U. S 661, 670, a decree for an injunction against a contributory infringer would sanction both "a misuse of the patent privilege and a violation of the anti-trust laws." The same rule would appear to apply to copyrights and prevent a suit for contributory infringement by a copyright owner who had licensed the printing of his book, only in connection with paper supplied by him, against a third party supplying paper to the licensee in violation of the agreement. See Interstate Circuit Inc. v. United States, 306 U. S. 208; United States v. Crescent Amusement Co., 323 U. S. 173; Straus v. Am. Publisher's Ass'n, 231 U. S. 222.

It is true that a copyrighted motion picture when united with another copyrighted picture by block-booking is not tied to an uncopyrighted article. Nevertheless the objections to conditioning the licensing of one picture upon the licensing of another are the same, for the result is to give the copyright owner not only the reward which is his due from the licensing of a single copyrighted film, but to extend his monopoly by requiring his licensee to accept one or more other films and to pay royalties therefor as an additional consideration. We cannot see that this differs in principle from requiring the licensee to purchase uncopyrighted articles in connection with the license of a copyright. In either case the copyright owner is obtaining something which the decisions have forbidden as beyond the grant of his limited monopoly. Justice Holmes in his dissenting opinion in Motion Picture Patents Co. v. Universal Film Mfg. Co., 243 U. S. 502, 519, argued persuasively that the right of the owner of a patent to keep his device out of use included the right to condition its use. Such a doctrine would contravene the rule we are laying down, but his views were rejected by the majority of the Supreme Court in that decision, as well as in Straus v. Victor Talking Machine Co., 243 U. S. 490, and have proved to be contrary to a long line of subsequent decisions of that court—indeed to have been supplanted by the general trend of authority ever since the days of Henry v. Dick, 224 U. S. 1.

It may be argued that the common law gives a right to condition the licensing of one film upon the acceptance of another—that it is as though the owner of ordinary chattels refused to sell a lot to A unless the latter would purchase in a larger quantity than he desired. The question whether such a contract involving patents or copyrights was good at common law was apparently left open in Motion Picture Patents Co. v. Universal Film Mfg. Co., 243 U. S. 503, and Keeler v. Standard Folding Bed Co., 157 U. S. 659, and in Federal Trade Commission v. Paramount Famous-Lasky Corp., 57 F. 2d 152, the Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit sustained contracts of block-booking.

Block-booking, when the license of any film is conditioned upon taking of other films, is a system which prevents competitors from bidding for single pictures on their individual merits and adds to the monopoly of a single copyrighted picture that of another copyrighted picture which must be taken and exhibited in order to secure the first. It differs from such a sale of chattels as we have mentioned because it extends a monopoly which the owner of the chattels is not assumed to have. We are not inclined to follow Federal Trade Commission v. Paramount Famous-Lasky Corp., 57 F. 2d 152 (C. C. A. 2), for the reason we have given and particularly because of recent decisions of the Supreme Court. As Stone, C.J., said in Ethyl Gasoline Corp. v. United States, 309 U. S. 436, 459,—when dealing with the use of one patent to exploit another:

> "• • • It [Ethyl Gasoline Corporation] has chosen to exploit its patents by manufacturing the fluid covered by them and by selling that fluid to refiners for use in the manufacture of motor fuel. Such benefits as result from control over the marketing of treated fuel by the jobbers accrue primarily to the refiners and indirectly to appellant, only in the enjoyment of its monopoly of the fluid secured under another patent. The licensing conditions are thus not used as a means of stimulating the commercial development and financial returns of the patented invention which is licensed, but for the commercial development of the business of the refiners and the exploitation of a second patent monopoly not embraced in the first. The patent monopoly of one invention may no more be enlarged for the exploitation of a monopoly of another, see Standard Sanitary Mfg. Co. v. United States, supra, than for the exploitation of an unpatented article, United Shoe Machinery Co. v. United States, supra; Carbice Corporation v. American Patents Corp., supra; Leitch Manufacturing Co. v. Barber Co., supra; American Lecithin Co. v. Warfield Co., 105 F. 2d 207, or for the exploitation or promotion of a business not embraced within the patent. Interstate Circuit v. United States, supra, 228-230."

See also United States v. Crescent Amusement Co., 323 U. S. 173; Hartford-Empire Co. v. United States, 323 U. S. 386, 415, 452-3; Mercoid Corp. v. Mid-Continent Investment Co., 320 U. S. 661, 670; Mercoid Corp. v. Minneapolis Honeywell Regulator Co., 320 U. S. 680, 684; United States v. Masonite Corp., 316 U. S. 265, 277-8; Interstate Circuit, Inc. v. United States, 306 U. S. 208, 227-230; Stokes & Smith Co. v. Transparent-Wrap Machine Corp., decided by Second Circuit Court of Appeals May 1, 1946.

We however declare illegal only that aspect of block-booking which makes the licensing of one copyright conditional upon an agreement to accept a license of one or more other copyrights. A distributor may license to an exhibitor at one time as many films as the latter wishes to receive, but the distributor may not constitute groups of pictures which it refuses to license separately. The distributor may of course not license his pictures at all, but if he does license them, he must do so severally and, in accordance with the bidding procedure previously indicated, must license them to the exhibitor or exhibitors who are qualified and offer the best terms for the various runs.

Blind-selling does not appear to be as inherently restrictive of competition as block-booking, although it is capable of some abuse. By this practise a distributor could promise a picture of good quality or of a certain type which when produced might prove to be of poor quality or of another type—a competing distributor meanwhile being unable to market its product and in the end losing its outlets for future pictures. The evidence indicates that trade-shows, which are designed to prevent such blind-selling, are poorly attended by exhibitors. Record pp. 1178-9. Accordingly, exhibitors who choose to obtain their films for exhibition in quantities, need to be protected against burdensome agreements by being given an option to reject a certain percentage of their blind-licensed pictures within a reasonable time after they shall have become available for inspection. Such right of rejection has been incorporated in numerous licenses given by the defendants and should be afforded whenever licenses of unproduced films and films not trade-shown are secured by an exhibitor who has made the best competitive bid for them.

The only group licensing we are prepared to sanction is licensing by which the group is not offered on condition that the license shall take all the pictures included in it, or none, but in which the pictures are separately priced, and each picture is to be sold to the highest duly qualified bidder. As we have already indicated in discussing formula deals, master agreements, and franchises, the offering of pictures should be theatre by theatre, and if more than one picture is included in a license agreement, it will be only because of business convenience and to the extent that each picture so included has received the best bid.

"Pooling" Agreements.

It is claimed by plaintiff that the theatre-owning defendants have combined with each other and with independent theatre-owners by "pooling" their theatres through operating agreements, leases, joint stock ownership of theatre-operating corporations, or through joint ownership of theatres in fee. We are asked to determine the validity of these various means of joining interests.

By far the most numerous type of agreement in evidence is that by which given theatres of two or more exhibitors, normally in competition with each other, are operated as a unit or most of their business policies collectively determined by a joint committee, or by one of the exhibitors, and by which profits of the "pooled" theatres are divided among the owners according to pre-agreed percentages. See, e.g., Plaintiff's Exhibits 9, 100, 200, 206, 213, 218, 220-1, 223, 226, 226A, 232. Some of the agreements provide that the parties thereto may not acquire other theatres in the competitive vicinity without first offering them for inclusion in the "pool". See, e.g., Plaintiff's Exhibits 201, 205-6, 219.

These operating agreements we hold to be in clear conflict with the Sherman Act, for through them a defendant-exhibitor reduces to a minimum opposition between its own and other theatres in the "pool". Cooperation, rather than competition, characterizes their operation, and in view of the exhibitor-defendants' financial strength, control of first-class film distribution, ownership of concentrated numbers of first-run theatres, and especially their combination to reduce competition in exhibition through systems of price-fixing and clearances, such restraints as these agreements impose upon free commerce in motion pictures are far less than reasonable. The result is to eliminate competition pro tanto both in exhibition and in distribution of films which would flow almost automatically to the theatres in the earnings of which they have a joint interest.

Other forms of operating agreements are between major defendants and independent exhibitors rather than between major defendants, see, e.g., Plaintiff's Exhibits 97, 118, 208, 238-9, 358, but we are not of the opinion that this renders them legal. The effect is to ally two or more theatres of different ownership into a coalition for the nullification of competition between them and for their more effective competition against theatres not members of the "pool". Even if the parties to such combinations were not major film producers and distributors, but were all wholly independent exhibitors, such agreements might often be regarded as beyond the reasonable limits of restraint allowance under the Sherman Act. This result is certain when some of the parties are of major stature in the movie industry and have in other ways imposed unlawful restraints upon it, as we have found to be the case upon the record before us.

In certain other cases the operating agreements are accomplished by leases of theatres, the rentals being determined by a stipulated percentage of profits earned by the "pooled" theatres, see, e.g., Plaintiff's Exhibits 9, 106, 118, 204. This appears to be but another means of carrying out the illegal objection discussed above. While a theatre-owner may of course remove itself from the business of operating theatres by leasing them to anyone it deems fit upon a fixed rental basis, so long as a monopoly in exhibition is not thereby achieved by the lessee, any arrangement whereby one of the exhibitor-defendants in this case allies its theaters with those of a competing exhibitor, independent or affiliated, and yet itself remains in the trade of exhibiting motion pictures by retaining an interest in the profits earned by the allied theatres, is unlawful under the anti-trust acts.

Many theatres, or the corporations owning them, are held jointly by one or more of the exhibitor-defendants, in some cases in conjunction with independents. See, e.g., Plaintiff's Exhibits 8, 9, 46, 48, 62, 164, 355, 387; RKO's Exhibit 11. As these joint interests enable the major defendants to operate theatres collectively, rather than competitively, we find them illegal for the reasons above stated. Appropriate steps should be taken so that no exhibitor-defendant will own theatres (whether represented by fee, beneficial, or stock interests) jointly with other exhibitor-defendants, regardless of the size of interests involved. Appropriate steps should also be taken so that no exhibitor-defendant or defendants will jointly own a theatre or stock interest therein with any independent exhibitor, except when a defendant or an independent owns an interest of five per cent or less, which we deem de minimis and only to be treated as an inconsequential investment in exhibition. See infra p. 71. This result may be reached in situations like Florida, Texas, Minnesota and Michigan by a sale, purchase, or exchange of interests in jointly-owned theatres so long as the transaction sought to be achieved will not result in an unreasonable restraint of competition in exhibition within the particular competitive area. To this end the court will control the manner in which rearrangements of these joint interests are effected.

It seems impracticable to do more than lay down general rules as to the foregoing situations. If further details are required to cover specific provisions of the various pooling agreements, they should be set forth in the decree to be hereafter entered.

It should be added that in our opinion there can be no objection to operating, booking, or film buying through agents, provided the agent is not also acting in respect to theatres owned by other exhibitors, independent or affiliated, and provided that in case the agent is buying films for its principal he does this through the bidding system, theatre by theatre.

Discrimination Among Licensees.

The amended and supplemental complaint alleges that in licensing films each of the distributor-defendants has discriminated against small independent exhibitors and in favor of the large affiliated and unaffiliated circuits. Of the various contract provisions by which such discriminations are said to have been accomplished, plaintiff sets forth the following in its brief: suspending the terms of a given contract, if a circuit theatre remains closed for more than eight weeks, and reinstating it without liability upon reopening. Plaintiff's Exhibits 188, 265-6, 383-4, 472-3; allowing large privileges in the selection and elimination of films. Plaintiff's Exhibits 172, 177, 192, 263-6, 383-4, 472;

allowing deductions in film rentals if double bills are played, Plaintiff's Exhibits 183-4, 190, 199, 242, 245, 247, 258-9, 262, 264-6, 271-2a, 274, 382-3, 473; granting moveovers and extended runs, Plaintiff's Exhibits 182-2a, 199, 260, 262, 265, 267, 274, 383-4, 474, 476; granting roadshow privileges, Plaintiff's Exhibits 187-8, 199, 232, 265-6, 383-4, 472; allowing overage and underage, Plaintiff's Exhibits 190-1, 194, 259, 265-6, 383; granting unlimited playing time, Plaintiff's Exhibits 241, 267, 269, 471; excluding foreign pictures and those of independent producers, Plaintiff's Exhibits 173-4, 181, 190-1, 194, 199, 262, 265-6, 272a, 383-4, 395, 470-2; granting rights to question the classification of features for rental purposes, Plaintiff's Exhibits 187, 232, 259, 265, 472-3; and especially, discriminating in film rentals, clearances, and minimum admission prices, see Plaintiff's Brief pp. 56-70, 75-85.

These provisions are found most frequently in franchises and master agreements, which are made with the larger circuits of affiliated and unaffiliated theatres. Record pp. 1432-3; Columbia's Exhibit 9a; Universal's Exhibit 2; Plaintiff's Exhibits 195, 198, 259, 261, 265-6a, 384, 396, 470-3. Small independents are usually licensed, however, upon the standard forms of contract, which do not include them. Record pp. 1432-3; Plaintiff's Exhibits 275-90. The competitive advantages of these provisions are so great that their inclusion in contracts with the larger circuits constitutes an unreasonable discrimination against small competitors in violation of the anti-trust laws. It seems unnecessary to decide whether the record before us justifies a reasonable inference that the distributor-defendants have conspired among themselves to discriminate among their licensees, for each discriminating contract constitutes a conspiracy between the licensee and licensor. Interstate Circuit Inc. v. United States, 306 U. S. 208; United States v. Crescent Amusement Co., 323 U. S. 173.

The defendants argue that these privileges granted to the circuits flow from their negotiations with the individual theatre-owners rather than from a standard policy of discrimination deliberately pursued by them. This is perhaps true, but the result is the same whether the bargaining power of the large exhibitors forces upon the distributors a discriminatory policy, or whether the latter voluntarily carry such a policy into effect. Acquiescence in an unreasonable restraint, as well as the creation of such a restraint, violates the Sherman Act. Under the bidding system we are requiring such discriminations would appear impossible. Those provisions which are not compatible with the operation of this system, or which are inherently unreasonable, such as a provision for clearance between theatres where there is no substantial competition, will no longer be includible in licenses, as mentioned elsewhere, but otherwise the bidders will compete for licensing contracts on a parity, in that the same offer will be made to all prospective exhibitors in a community.

The foregoing is not to be construed, however, as indicating that the distributor-defendants have discriminated among their licensees with respect to film rentals, clearances, or minimum admission prices. They have perhaps done so, but we are without sufficient knowledge of the many factors entering into the determination of these provisions such as the character of specific communities, the nature of the different theatre appointments, of the patrons, operating policies, locations, and responsibility of operators. In the absence of such facts, we are unable to infer that the distributor-defendants have violated the Sherman Act in this particular regard, but any discriminations in the other ways noted above in favor of affiliated licensee or licensees connected with independent circuits as against individual independents must be enjoined, and we believe will not exist in future licenses under the bidding system for which we are providing.

Divestiture of Theatres.

We cannot accede to the prayer of the plaintiff that the major defendants should be divested of their theatres in order that no distributor of motion pictures shall be an exhibitor. Undoubtedly such a step while not ipso facto preventing price-fixing agreements or unreasonable clearance would terminate the government's most urgent objections to the present methods of conducting the motion picture business, but it would also withdraw the defendant-distributors from competition in the exhibition field and at the same time would create a new set of theatre owners which would be quite unlikely for some years to give the public as good service as the exhibitors they would have supplanted in view of the latter's demonstrated experience and skill in operating what must be regarded as in general the largest and best equipped theatres. We think that the opportunity of independents to compete under the bidding system for pictures and runs renders such a harsh remedy as complete divestiture unnecessary, at least until the efficiency of that system has been tried and found wanting.

In the year 1945 there were about 18,076 motion picture theatres in the United States of which the five major defendants had interests in 3,137 or 17.35 per cent. Of the latter, Paramount or its subsidiaries owned independently of the other defendants 1,395—a little less than half, or about 7.72 per cent; Warner 501, or about 2.77 per cent; Loew's 135, or about .74 per cent; Fox 636, or about 3.52 per cent, and RKO 109, or about .60 per cent. There were 361 theatres, or about 2.00 per cent, in which two or more of these defendants had joint interests, whether held directly or indirectly through stock ownership in the same corporation or through a lease or operating agreement. This tabulation excludes theatres connected with one or more of the defendants through film-buying or management contracts or through corporations in which a defendant owns an indirect minority stock interest. It includes all theatres in which each defendant otherwise owns a direct or indirect interest of any amount. See Loew's Exhibit 2; RKO's Exhibit 11; Plaintiff's Exhibits 8, 9, 12-3, 22, 47-8, 64, 87-8, 97, 100, 118-20, 156-64, 360.

It would seem unlikely that theatre owners having aggregate interests of little more than one-sixth of all the theatres in the United States are exercising such a monopoly of the motion picture business that they should be subjected to the drastic remedy of complete divestiture in order to effect a proper degree of free competition. It is only in certain localities and not in general, that an ownership even of first-run theatres approximating monopoly exists. Under the proposed system, the only theatres the competition of which in exhibition even Paramount—the largest owner—would in anywise control are the 7.72 per cent which it now owns. Each of the other four major defendants would control a far smaller percentage of the theatres. Even in places like Philadelphia and Cincinnati, where Warner and RKO have owned all the first-run theatres, their theatre interest cannot properly be exaggerated to establish a conspiracy in restraining exhibition, for in such localities there would seem to be nothing to prevent other persons from building theatres of a similar type if the market for the distribution of films should be opened to the highest bidder and the builder of a new theatre could compete with the other theatre owners in obtaining pictures for exhibition in the theatre he had built. The only pictures that the present sole exhibitors in such localities could control would be their own, which they can always exhibit freely in their own theatres.

In about 60 per cent of the 92 cities having populations of over 100,000 on which the government mainly relies to prove its case, there are independent first-run theatres in competition with those of the major defendants except so far as it may be restricted by the trade practices we have criticized.[8] In about 91 per cent of these cities there is competition in first runs between independents and some of the major defendants or among the major defendants themselves, except so far as it may be restricted by the above trade practices.[9] If the bidding system we propose to set up, minimum admission prices in licenses eliminated, and the other restrictive agreements which we have discussed terminated, it is our opinion that adequate competition would exist. Indeed in all of the 92 cities, even where there is no present competition in first runs there is always competition in some run.

Moreover, there is no substantial proof that any of the corporate defendants was organized or has been maintained for the purpose of achieving a national monopoly, as was the case in Standard Oil Co. v. United States, 221 U. S. 1; United States v. American Tobacco Co., 221 U. S. 106, and United States v. Aluminum Co. of America, 148 F. 2d 416 (C. C. A. 2). The five major defendants cannot be treated collectively so as to establish claims of general monopolization in exhibition. They can only be restrained from the unlawful practices in fixing minimum prices, obtaining unreasonable clearances, block-booking, and other things we have criticized.

If in certain localities there is ownership by a single defendant of all the first-run theatres, there is no sufficient proof that it has been for the purpose of creating a monopoly and has not rather arisen from the inertness of competitors, their lack of financial ability to build theatres comparable to those of the defendants, or from the preference of the public for the best equipped houses and not from "inherent vice" on the part of these defendants. defendant had a right to build and to own theatres and to exhibit pictures in them, and it takes greater proof than that each of them possessed great financial strength, many theatres, and exhibited the greater number of first-runs to deprive it of the ordinary rights of ownership. Outside the limits of the trade practices and agreements which we have found to violate the anti-trust laws and which will under the final decree be abolished, there is general competition among all the defendants as well as between them and independent distributors for the exhibition of their various pictures. Record p. 1062.

> "If there is only one store in a town at which every one trades, that fact does not itself constitute a monopoly in the legal sense. It is only when the merchant maintains his position by devices which compel everyone to trade with him exclusively that the situation becomes legally objectionable."

In the case at bar, as we have reiterated, many of the objections are to the trade practices we have alluded to, and not to the ownership of theatres either by the major defendants or by their wholly-owned subsidiaries. If those theatres were all owned by entirely independent corporations, the distributing-producing defendants, if not in competition in the distribution of their films, would control competition in the exhibition business by in the aggregate controlling the distribution of most of the best pictures in the United States and imposing restrictions upon their use. The root of the difficulties we have discovered lies not in the ownership of many or most of the best theatres by the producer-distributors, but in price-fixing, non-competitive granting of runs and clearances, unreasonable clearances, formula deals, master agreements, franchises, block-booking, pooling agreements and certain discriminations among licensees between defendants and independents. These practices, if employed in the future, in favor of powerful independents would effect all of the undesirable results that have existed when the five major defendants and their subsidiaries have owned or controlled numerous theatres in which the defendants' pictures have been exhibited. That such would be the case seems amply demonstrated by the decisions where powerful independent circuits were involved. United States v. Crescent Amusement Co., 323 U. S. 173; Interstate Circuit Inc. v. United States, 306 U. S. 208. If the objectionable trade practices were eliminated, the only difference between such an assumed situation in which the defendants owned no theatres and the present would be the inability of the major defendants to play their own pictures in their own theatres. The percentage of pictures on the market which any of the five major defendants could play in its own theatres would be relatively small and in nowise approximates a monopoly of film exhibition.[10] theatres jointly with one another or if their interests be more than five per cent even where jointly held with independents which, in our opinion, calls for a divestiture of such interests whether such partial interest is in fee or through stock ownership or otherwise.

There is no evidence that in a city such as Cincinnati, in which a major defendant owns all of the first-run theatres, other exhibitors, affiliated or unaffiliated, have been prevented from also owning theatres for exhibition on first-run and there consequently is no monopoly in the legal sense, see United States v. Pullman Company, 64 F. Supp. 108, 112, and no reason for directing a divestiture. But when theatres are jointly owned by a major defendant and another party, it is evident that both joint owners wish to participate and indeed are directly or indirectly participating in the business of exhibiting motion pictures. In such case their joining of interests is illegal under the anti-trust laws for the reason that the major defendant thereby eliminates putative competition between itself and the other joint owner, who otherwise would be in a position to operate theatres independently. Such an elimination of competition is unreasonable in view of the defendant's being a powerful factor in the industry capable of exerting vast influence to its ends, and of the methods it has employed to restrain and control normal competition in distributing and exhibiting motion pictures through price-fixing, system of clearances, block-booking, pooling and the other practices we have alluded to.

We find such joint interests in a great number of theatres, a summary of which is set forth below,[11] and hold that they must be terminated by a sale to, or purchase from the co-owner or owners, or by a sale to a party not one of the other defendant-exhibitors. The decree or subsequent orders to be entered in conformity with this opinion will control sales or exchanges of such fractional interests for the purpose of restoring or creating a reasonable competition in the areas in question.

General Considerations.

It may be said that such restrictions in commercial dealings as we would impose will interfere with the right of a copyright owner to choose his customers or contract for the disposition of his own property. The answer is that no such absolute right exists where its exercise will involve an extension of a copyright monopoly or an unreasonable interference with competition in the distribution and exhibition of moving pictures. A system of fixed admission prices, clearances and block-booking is so restrictive of competition in its tendency that it should be modified to comply with the terms of the Sherman Act. The modifications in practices we have indicated will relieve conditions that have grown up through the years. Indeed the practices are defended on the ground that business convenience and long usage ought to sanction them. But, in spite of their long continuance, we cannot escape the conclusion that in various ways the system stifles competition and violates the law and that business convenience and loyalty to former customers afford a lame excuse for depriving others of rights to compete and for perpetuating unreasonable restrictions. The remedy we are giving against the infractions is certainly no more drastic in effect than the one the Supreme Court granted in Interstate Circuit v. United States, 306 U. S. 208, nor more severe than the one it imposed in United States v. Crescent Amusement Co., 323 U. S. 173. The defendants have built up great business enterprises in a very popular field. Yet they have carried on practices we have found unduly restrictive of interstate commerce and even though we do not suggest that they any more than "those eighteen upon whom the tower in Siloam fell" have been "sinners above all men", yet measures should be taken to restore the moving picture business to a condition of competition that will benefit both competitors and the general public and to abate practices that are unlawful.

It is argued that the steps we have proposed would involve an interference with commercial practices that are generally acceptable and a hazardous attempt on the part of judges—unfamiliar with the details of business—to remodel its delicate adjustments which have hitherto provided the public with what is a new and great art. But we see nothing ruinous in the remedies proposed. Disputes which may arise under the bidding system are likely to relate to questions whether the bidder has a theatre adequate for the run for which he bids, whether the clearance requested is reasonable as regards his own theatre and those of others, and similar matters generally involved in comparing bids. If the defendants will consent to an arbitration system for the determination of such disputes of the kind that has worked so well under the consent decree, they will facilitate the adjustment of most of the differences that are likely to occur, with a large saving of time and money as compared with separate court actions.

A suit in the district court for violation of the Sherman Act is doubtless an awkward way to cure such ills as have arisen, but it is perhaps the best remedy now available to the government. There surely are evils in the existing system, and the Sherman Act provides a mode of correction which is lawfully invoked. At all events, that which is written is written, and is controlling on us.

It does not follow from the foregoing that we should wholly break up the exhibition business of each of the major defendants even though a "root and branch" decree might be legally possible. Such total divestiture would be injurious to the corporations concerned, and if we are right in our analysis of the situation, we should still have to give relief against price-fixing, systems of clearance, formula deals, master agreements and franchises, block-booking, pooling agreements, and other agreements we have held invalid. The relief proposed we believe should suffice, while total divestiture would be damaging to the public as well as to the defendants and not accomplish any useful purpose at the present time.

The Decree.

A decree is granted in accordance with the views expressed in the foregoing opinion to be settled on ten days' notice. It should provide for the dismissal of all claims asserted by the plaintiff against any of the defendants which act only as producers of motion pictures and for the dismissal of claims against any other defendants based on their acts as producers, whether as individuals or in conjunction with others.

The granting of licenses by any of the defendant-distributors which fix minimum prices for admission to theatres either of the defendants or of any other exhibitor should be enjoined in which such minimum admission prices are fixed by the parties either in writing, or through a committee, or through arbitration, or upon the happening of any event, or in any other wise.

The defendants should be enjoined from concertedly agreeing to maintain a system of clearances as among themselves or with other exhibitors, and no clearances should be granted against theatres in substantial competition with the theatre receiving a license for exhibition in excess of what is reasonably necessary to protect the licensee in the run granted. Existing clearances in excess of what is reasonably necessary to protect the licensees in the runs awarded to them shall be invalid pro tanto. In determining what is a reasonable clearance the following factors should be taken into consideration:

(1) The admission prices of the theatres involved, as set by the exhibitor;

(2) The character and location of the theatres involved, including size, type of entertainment, appointments, transit facilities, etc.;

(3) The policy of operation of the theatres involved, such as the showing of double features, gift nights, give-aways, premiums, cut-rate tickets, lotteries, etc.;

(4) The rental terms and license fees paid by the theatres involved and the revenues derived by the distributor-defendant from such theatres;

(5) The extent to which the theatres involved compete with each other for patronage;

(6) The fact that a theatre involved is affiliated with a defendant-distributor or with an independent circuit of theatres should be disregarded; and

(7) There should be no clearance between theatres not in substantial competition.

The further performance by any of the defendants of existing formula deals, master agreements to the extent that we have previously found them invalid, or franchises should be enjoined, and the defendants should also be enjoined from entering into or carrying out any similar agreements in the future.

Defendants owning a legal or equitable interest in theatres of ninety-five per cent or more either directly or through subsidiaries may exhibit pictures of their own or of their wholly owned subsidiaries in such theatres upon such terms as to admission prices and clearances and on such runs as they see fit.

No defendant or its subsidiaries shall exhibit its films other than on its own behalf or through wholly owned subsidiaries, or subsidiaries in which it has an interest of at least ninety-five per cent, without offering the license at a minimum price for any run desired by the operators of each theatre within the competitive area. The license desired shall in such case be granted to the highest responsible bidder having a theatre of a size and equipment adequate to show the picture upon the terms offered. The license shall be granted solely upon the merits and without discrimination in favor of affiliates, old customers, or any person whatever. Each license shall be offered and taken theatre by theatre and picture by picture. No contracts for exhibition shall be entered into, or if already outstanding shall be performed, in which the license to exhibit one feature is conditioned upon an agreement of the licensee to take a license of one or more other features, but licenses to exhibit more than one feature may be included in a single instrument provided the licensee shall have had the opportunity to bid for each feature separately and shall have made the best bid for each picture so included. To the extent that any of the pictures have not been trade-shown prior to the granting of a license for more than a single picture, the licensee shall be given by the licensor the right to reject a percentage of such pictures not trade-shown prior to the granting of the license to be fixed by the decree. But that right to reject any picture must be exercised within ten days after there has been an opportunity afforded to the licensee to inspect it.

The defendants shall be enjoined from entering into or continuing to perform existing pooling agreements whereby given theatres of two or more exhibitors, normally in competition, are operated as a unit or whereby the business policies of such exhibitors are collectively determined by a joint committee, or by one of the exhibitors, or whereby profits of the "pooled" theatres are divided among the owners according to pre-agreed percentages. They shall also be enjoined from making or continuing to perform agreements that the parties may not acquire other theatres in the competitive area without first offering them for inclusion in the pool. The making or continuance of leases of theatres under which defendants lease any of their theatres to another defendant or to an independent operating a theatre in the competitive area in return for a share of the profits shall be enjoined.

Each defendant shall cease and desist from ownership of an interest in any theatre, whether in fee or in stock or otherwise, in conjunction with another defendant-exhibitor. Each defendant shall cease and desist from ownership, jointly with an independent, of an interest in any theatre, greater than five per cent, unless such defendant's interest is ninety-five per cent or more; and where the interest of such defendant is more than five per cent and less than ninety-five per cent, such joint interests shall be dissolved either by a sale to, or by a purchase from, such co-owner or co-owners. Rearrangements of such joint interests with an independent, if by purchase, shall, however, be subject to the direction of this court so that their effectuation may promote competition in the exhibition of motion pictures. Where a defendant owns a ninety-five or greater per cent interest in any theatre, such theatre may be considered as its own so far as this opinion and the decree to be entered hereon are concerned. Each of the defendants shall be enjoined from expanding its theatre holdings except for the purpose of acquiring a co-owner's interest in jointly owned theatres, and this only in cases where the court shall permit such acquisition, instead of requiring an outright sale of the undivided interest of the defendant in question. The foregoing provision as to divestiture of partial interests in theatres shall apply both to interests held in fee and beneficially and to those represented by shares of stock. But it shall not prevent a defendant from acquiring theatres or interests therein in order to protect its investments, or in order to enter a competitive field; if in the later case, this court or other competent authority shall approve the acquisition after due application is made therefor.

Each defendant shall be enjoined from operating, booking or film-buying through any agent who is also acting in such matters for any other exhibitor, independent or affiliated.

The decree shall also provide for arbitration of disputes as to bids, clearances, runs, and any other subjects appropriate for arbitration in respect to all parties who may consent to the creation of such tribunals for adjustment of such disputes. It shall also provide for an appeal board generally similar to the one created by the consent decree as to any parties consenting thereto. It shall make such disposition of the provisions of the existing consent decree signed November 30, 1940, as may be necessary in view of the foregoing opinion.

In order to secure compliance with the decree to be entered, duly authorized representatives of the Departmnt of Justice shall on the written request of the Attorney General or the Assistant Attorney General in charge of anti-trust matters, and on reasonable notice to the defendant or defendants affected, be permitted reasonable access to all books and papers of the defendants and reasonable opportunity to interview their officers or employees, as provided in Section XVIII of the Consent Decree.

Proceedings under the decree to be entered shall be stayed pending appeal or for the purpose of enabling the parties to adjust their business without an unfair burden or as practice may require upon such terms as the decree shall provide.

Jurisdiction of this cause shall be retained for the purpose of enabling any of the parties to the decree to apply to the court at any time for such orders or directions as may be necessary or appropriate for the construction or carrying out of the same, for the enforcement of compliance therewith, and for the punishment of violations thereof, or for other or further relief.

Findings should be proposed by the parties for the assistance of the court, but such proposed findings will form no part of the record.

PICTURES, INC., VITAGRAPH, INC., WARNER BROS. CIRCUIT MANAGEMENT CORPORATION, TWENTIETH CENTURY-FOX FILM CORPORATION, NATIONAL THEATRES CORPORATION, COLUMBIA PICTURES CORPORATION, SCREEN GEMS, INC., COLUMBIA PICTURES OF LOUISIANA, INC., UNIVERSAL CORPORATION, UNIVERSAL PICTURES COMPANY, INC., UNIVERSAL FILM EXCHANGES, INC., BIG U FILM EXCHANGE, INC., and UNITED ARTISTS CORPORATION, Defendants.

DECREE.

The court having rendered its opinion herein on June 11, 1946, having duly considered the proposals of the parties and of amici curiae as to its findings and judgment, and having filed its findings of fact and conclusions of law, wherein certain of the defendants herein were found to have violated the Act of Congress approved July 2, 1890, 26 Stat. 209, commonly known as the Sherman Act,

It is hereby ordered, adjudged and decreed, as follows:

I.

1. The complaint is dismissed as to the defendants Screen Gems, Inc. and the corporation named as Universal Pictures Company, Inc., merged during the pendency of this case into the defendant Universal Corporation. The complaint is also dismissed as to all claims made against the remaining defendants herein based upon their acts as producers, whether as individuals or in conjunction with others.

II.

Each of the defendant distributors, Paramount Pictures, Inc.; Paramount Film Distributing Corporation; Loews, Incorporated; Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation; RKO Radio Pictures, Inc.; Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc.; Warner Bros. Pictures Distributing Corporation [formerly known as Vitagraph, Inc.]; Twentieth-Century Fox Film Corporation; Columbia Pictures Corporation; Columbia Pictures of Louisiana, Inc.; Universal Corporation; Universal Film Exchanges, Inc.; Big U Film Exchange, Inc.; and United Artists Corporation; and the successors of each of them, and any and all individuals who act in behalf of any thereof with respect to the matters enjoined, and each corporation in which said defendants or any of them own a direct or indirect stock interest of more than fifty per cent, is hereby enjoined:

1. From granting any license in which minimum prices for admission to a theatre are fixed by the parties, either in writing or through a committee, or through arbitration, or upon the happening of any event or in any manner or by any means.

2. From agreeing with each other or with any exhibitors or distributors to maintain a system of clearances; the term "clearances" as used herein meaning the period of time stipulated in license contracts which must elapse between runs of the same feature within a particular area or in specified theatres.

3. From granting any clearance between theatres not in substantial competition.

4. From granting or enforcing any clearance against theatres in substantial competition with the theatre receiving the license for exhibition in excess of what is reasonably necessary to protect the licensee in the run granted. Whenever any clearance provision is attacked as not legal under the provisions of this decree, the burden shall be upon the distributor to sustain the legality thereof.

5. From further performing any existing franchise to which it is a party and from making any franchises in the future. The term "franchise" as used herein means a licensing agreement or series of licensing agreements, entered into as a part of the same transaction, in effect for more than one motion picture season and covering the exhibition of pictures released by one distributor during the entire period of agreement.

6. From making or further performing any formula deal or master agreement to which it is a party. The term "formula deal" as used herein means a licensing agreement with a circuit of theatres in which the license fee of a given feature is measured for the theatres covered by the agreement by a specified percentage of the feature's national gross. The term "master agreement" means a licensing agreement, also known as a "blanket deal" covering the exhibition of features in a number of theatres usually comprising a circuit.

7. From performing or entering into any license in which the right to exhibit one feature is conditioned upon the licensee's taking one or more other features. To the extent that any of the features have not been trade shown prior to the granting of the license for more than a single feature, the licensee shall be given by the licensor the right to reject twenty per cent of such features not trade shown prior to the granting of the license, such right of rejection to be exercised in the order of release within ten days after there has been an opportunity afforded to the licensee to inspect the feature.

8. From licensing in the future any feature for exhibition in any theatre, not its own, in any manner except the following:

(a) A license to exhibit each feature released for public exhibition in any competitive area shall be offered to the operator of each theatre in such area who desires to exhibit it on some run [other than that upon which such feature is to be exhibited in the theatre of the licensor] selected by such operator, and upon uniform terms;

(b) Each license shall be granted solely upon the merits and without discrimination in favor of affiliates, old customers or others;

(c) Where a run is desired, or is to be offered, upon terms which exclude simultaneous exhibition in competing theatres, the distributor shall notify, not less than thirty days in advance of the date when bids will be received, all exhibitors in the competitive area, offering to license the features upon one or more runs, and in such offer shall state the amount of a flat rental as the minimum for such license for a specified number of days of exhibition, the time when the exhibition is to commence and the availability and clearance, if any, which will be granted for each such run. Within fifteen days after receiving such notice, any exhibitor in such competitive area may bid for such license, and in his bid shall state what run such exhibitor desires and what he is willing to pay for such feature, which statement may specify a flat rental, or a percentage of gross receipts, or both, or any other form of rental, and shall also specify what clearance such exhibitor is willing to accept, the time and days when such exhibitor desires to exhibit it, and any other offers which such exhibitor may care to make. The distributor may reject all offers made for any such feature, but in the event of the acceptance of any, the distributor shall grant such license upon the run bid for to the highest responsible bidder, having a theatre of a size, location and equipment adequate to yield a reasonable return to the licensor. The method of licensing specified in this subdivision shall not be required in areas where there is no competition among theatres or in run, or in which there is no offer made by any exhibitor within the time above mentioned. The words "exclude simultaneous exhibition" shall be held to mean the exhibition of a specified run in one theatre with clearance over other theatres in the competitive area. The words "competitive area" shall refer to the territory occupied by more than one theatre in which it may fairly and reasonably be said that such theatres compete with each other for the exhibition of features on any run.

(e) A theatre is not a defendant's own theatre unless it owns therein a legal or equitable interest of ninety-five per cent or more, either directly or through affiliates or subsidiaries.

9. From arbitrarily refusing the demand of an exhibitor, who operates a theatre in competition with another theatre not owned or operated by a defendant distributor, or its affiliate or subsidiary, made by registered mail, addressed to the home office of the distributor, to license a feature to him for exhibition on a run selected by the exhibitor, instead of licensing it to another exhibitor for exhibition in his competing theatre on such run. Such demand shall be deemed to have been refused either upon the receipt by the exhibitor of a refusal in writing or upon the expiration of ten days after the receipt of the exhibitor's demand.

III.

Each of the defendant exhibitors, Paramount Pictures, Inc., Loews, Incorporated, Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation, Keith-Albee-Orpheum Corporation, RKO Proctor Corporation, RKO Midwest Corporation, Warner Bros. Pictures, Warner Bros. Circuit Management Corporation, Twentieth Century Fox Film Corporation, and National Theatres, Inc. is hereby enjoined and restrained:

(1) From performing or enforcing agreements referred to in paragraphs 5 and 6 of the foregoing section II hereof to which it may be a party.

(2) From making or continuing to perform pooling agreements whereby given theatres of two or more exhibitors normally in competition are operated as a unit or whereby the business policies of such exhibitors are collectively determined by a joint committee or by one of the exhibitors or whereby profits of the "pooled" theatres are divided among the owners according to pre-arranged percentages.

(3) From making or continuing to perform agreements that the parties may not acquire other theatres in a competitive area where a pool operates without first offering them for inclusion in the pool.

(4) From making or continuing leases of theatres under which it leases any of its theatres to another defendant or to an independent operating a theatre in the same competitive area in return for a share of the profits.

(5) From continuing to own or acquiring any beneficial interest in any theatre, whether in fee or shares of stock or otherwise, in conjunction with another defendant, and from continuing to own or acquire such an interest in conjunction with an independent [meaning any former, present or putative motion picture theatre operator which is not owned or controlled by the defendant holding the interest in question,] where such interest shall be greater than five per cent unless such interest shall be ninety-five per cent or more. The existing relationships which violate this provision shall be terminated within two years. The relationships between the defendants and independents which violate this provision shall be terminated by a sale to, or purchase from the co-owner or co-owners, or by a sale to a party not one of the other defendants. In dissolving relationships among defendants and between defendants and independents which violate this provision, one defendant may acquire the interest of another defendant or independent if such defendant desiring to acquire such interest shall show to the satisfaction of the court, and the court shall first find, that such acquisition will not unduly restrain competition in the exhibition of feature motion pictures. Each of the defendants shall submit to this court within six months a statement outlining the extent to which it has complied and the manner in which it proposes to comply with this provision, setting forth in detail the names, locations, and general descriptions of the theatres, corporate securities, and beneficial interests of any kind involved, the sales thereof that it has made, and such interests as it proposes to acquire, with a statement of facts regarding each competitive situation involved in such proposed acquisition sufficient to show the probable effect of such acquisition on that situation. Similar reports shall be made quarterly thereafter until this provision shall have been fully complied with. Reasonable notice of such acquisition plans shall be served upon the Attorney General and plaintiff shall be given an opportunity to be heard with respect thereto before any such acquisition shall be approved by the court.

(6) From expanding its present theatre holdings in any manner whatsoever except as permitted in the preceding paragraph.

(7) From operating, booking, or buying features for any of its theatres through any agent who is known by it to be also acting in such manner for any other exhibitor, independent or affiliate.

IV.

Nothing contained in this Decree shall be construed to limit, in any way whatsoever, the right of each distributor-defendant to license, or in any way to arrange or provide for, the exhibition of any or all the motion pictures which it may at any time distribute, in such manner, and upon such terms, and subject to such conditions as may be satisfactory to it, in any theatre in which such distributor defendant has or may acquire pursuant to the terms of this Decree, a proprietary interest of ninety-five per cent or more either directly or through subsidiaries.

V.

The provisions of the existing consent decree are hereby declared to be of no further force or effect, except insofar as may be necessary to conclude arbitration proceedings now pending and to liquidate in an orderly manner the financial obligations of the defendants and the American Arbitration Association, incurred in the establishment of the consent decree arbitration systems. Existing awards and those made pursuant to pending proceedings shall continue to be enforceable. But this shall in no way preclude the parties or any other persons from setting up a reasonable system of arbitration either through the use of the present boards or any others as among themselves.

VI.

For the purpose of securing compliance with this Decree, and for no other purpose, duly authorized representatives of the Department of Justice shall, on written request of the Attorney General or the Assistant Attorney General in charge of antitrust matters, and on notice to any defendant, reasonable as to time and subject matter, made to such defendant at its principal office, and subject to any legally recognized privilege, (1) be permitted reasonable access, during the office hours of such defendant, to all books, ledgers, accounts, correspondence, memoranda and other records and documents in the possession or under the control of such defendant, relating to any of the matters contained in this Decree, and that during the times that the plaintiff shall desire such access, counsel for such defendant may be present, and (2) subject to the reasonable convenience of such defendant, and without restraint or interference from it, be permitted to interview its officers or employees regarding any such matters, at which interview counsel for the officer or employee interviewed and counsel for such defendant company may be present.

Information obtained pursuant to the provisions of this section shall not be divulged by any representative of the Department of Justice to any person other than a duly authorized representative of the Department of Justice, except in the course of legal proceedings to which the United States is a party, or as otherwise required by law.

VII.

Paragraphs 7 and 8 of section II of this judgment shall not become effective until July 1, 1947.

VIII.

Jurisdiction of this cause is retained for the purpose of enabling any of the parties to the judgment and no others, to apply to the court at any time for such orders or direction as may be necessary or appropriate for the construction, modification, or carrying out of the same, for the enforcement of compliance therewith, and for the punishment of violations thereof, or for other or further relief.

IX.

The operation of this judgment is stayed for sixty days from the date hereof, and, if an appeal is taken, for thirty days thereafter in order to enable any appellant to move before the Supreme Court for a stay in respect to any portion of the judgment from which an appeal has been taken.

MEMORANDUM IN RE FINDINGS AND DECREE.

In order to meet some of the objections raised at the hearing to the system of bidding for features described in the opinion of the court, we have modified the system there proposed so that competitive bidding will only be necessary within a competitive area and in such an area where it is desired by the exhibitors. In other words, the decree provides an opportunity to bid for any exhibitor in a competitive area who may desire to do so.

The arrangement for arbitration and an appeal board has been terminated except as to unfinished litigations and other matters referred to in the decree, because of the unwillingness of some of the parties to consent to their continuance. Nevertheless, as we have indicated in the opinion, these tribunals have dealt with trade disputes, particularly those as to clearances and runs, with rare efficiency, as both government counsel and counsel for other parties have conceded.

Indeed, the arbitration system set up under the consent decree of November 20, 1940, was created pursuant to the prayer of the amended and supplemental complaint by the United States filed November 14, 1940, in which, among other things, the plaintiff prayed that "a nation-wide system of impartial arbitration tribunals or such other means of enforcement as the court may deem proper be established pursuant to the final decree of this court in order to secure adequate enforcement of whatever general and nation-wide prohibitions of illegal practices may be contained therein."

We strongly recommend that some such system be continued in order to avoid cumbersome and dilatory court litigation and to preserve the practical advantages of the tribunals created by the consent decree.

OCTOBER TERM, 1946.

AMERICAN THEATRES ASSOCIATION, INC., SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA THEATRES OWNERS ASSOCIATION, JOSEPH MORITZ, et al., Appellants, vs.

No. 1354

STATEMENT BY THE TWENTIETH CENTURY-FOX, LOEW, RKO, PARAMOUNT AND WARNER DEFENDANTS OF THEIR GROUNDS OF OPPOSITION TO THE JURISDICTION OF THE SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES OF THE APPEAL OF AMERICAN THEATRES ASSOCIATION, INC., ET AL.

The Twentieth Century-Fox, Loew's, RKO, Paramount and Warner defendants-respondents move pursuant to the Rules of the Supreme Court of the United States for an order dismissing the attempted appeal of American Theatres Association, Inc., et al. herein with costs. In support of such motion, these defendants present this counter-statement as to the jurisdiction of this Court asserted by the appellants in their Statement of Jurisdiction filed February 26, 1947 and served March 3, 1947.

The attempted appeal is from an order denying the appellants leave to intervene in a suit brought by the United States against Paramount Pictures et al. to enjoin alleged violations of the anti-trust laws (15 U. S. C. Sections 1 et seq.). Intervention was not only opposed by the defendants, but also by the plaintiff, upon the ground that the effect of making the appellants parties, as plaintiff's counsel stated, "* * * would simply be to hopelessly confuse the litigation without in any way aiding the solution that the Court has to arrive at".

1. THE JURISDICTIONAL STATEMENT DOES NOT SUSTAIN THE ATTEMPTED APPEAL.

This Court has consistently held that it lacks jurisdiction of an appeal from an order which does not possess the finality required by the statutes regulating its appellate jurisdiction.

Allen Co. v. Cash Register Co., 322 U. S. 137;
United States v. California Cooperative Canners, 279 U. S. 533, 556;
Arnold v. Guimarin & Co., 263 U. S. 427;
Collins v. Miller, 252 U. S. 364.

The statute relied upon by the appellants herein to sustain the appellate jurisdiction of the Supreme Court, namely, 15 U. S. C. Section 29, (32 Stat. 823), is not applicable to their appeal for the reason that the order sought to be appealed from is not a final decree as required by that statute.

Since it appears from the jurisdictional statement that the order in question is not a final decree, this Court should dismiss the appeal summarily for want of jurisdiction.

In this very suit this Court has already dismissed a previous attempted appeal by an unsuccessful applicant for leave to intervene:

> St. Louis Amusement Co. et al. v. United States, 326 U. S. 680.

In so doing, the court followed its established rule in such cases:

> Allen Co. v. Cash Register Co., 322 U. S. 137;
> Jewel Incandescent Lamp Co. Inc. v. General Electric Company, 318 U. S. 746;
> Mississippi Central Railroad Co. v. Smith, 295 U. S. 718;
> Hinderlider v. La Platta River & Cherry Creek Ditch Co., 291 U. S. 650.

The cases cited by the appellants do not support their contention that this Court has jurisdiction of their appeal. United States v. Terminal Railroad Association of St. Louis, 236 U. S. 194, did not concern an appeal from an order of the District Court denying leave to intervene, but was an original motion in the Supreme Court for leave to intervene. The appeal by the intervenors in the Terminal case appears sub nom Evans and Howard Fire Brick Co. v. United States, 236 U. S. 210. The questions of appealability and of jurisdiction were not raised and the order denying intervention was affirmed, since the relief that the intervenors sought had been accomplished by the Supreme Court decision in the main suit upon the appeal of the St. Louis Terminal Co. Missouri-Kansas Pipe Line Co. v. United States, 312 U. S. 502, does not support the contention of the appellants, since there the intervenor was named in the decree which expressly provided that if action were taken affecting the intervenor's rights it should be permitted to be heard, as Mr. Justice Roberts pointed out in Allen Co. v. Cash Register Co., 322 U. S. 137, at 141.

2. THE ORDER IS NOT APPEALABLE.

An order denying leave to intervene is not appealable, at least unless the applicant for intervention has a direct and immediate interest in a res which is the subject of the suit and which will be lost if intervention is denied.

United States v. California Cooperative Canners, 279 U. S. 553, 556;
Creditors Commutation Co. v. U. S., 177 U. S. 131;
Ex-Parte Leaf Tobacco Board of Trade, 222 U. S. 578;
In re Engelhard & Sons Co., 231 U. S. 646;
City of New York v. Consolidated Gas Co., 253 U. S. 219;
City of New York v. New York Telephone Co., 261 U. S. 312.

The appellants in this case, American Theatres Association, Inc., et al., have no such interest in the subject matter of the present suit.

Furthermore, in the case at bar, it is clear beyond question that the appellants do not have any legal interest in this litigation which is affected by the judgment herein. In other words, if one or more of the defendants had happened to distribute their motion pictures in the manner that is now required by the judgment, none of the appellants would have been possessed of the right to compel such defendants to sell in any other manner. The mere fact that the judgment directs the defendants to sell in this manner does not provide the appellants with any status to complain.

The order denying leave to intervene did not finally determine any right or claim which appellants may possess. Their right, if any, to institute independent suits to enforce whatever rights they may possess is not affected by the order sought to be appealed from (15 U. S. C. Section 15).

3. APPELLANTS WERE NOT ENTITLED TO INTERVENE AS A MATTER OF RIGHT AND DID NOT CLAIM INTERVENTION AS A MATTER OF DISCRETION. REFUSAL OF LEAVE WAS CORRECT AND NOT AN ABUSE OF DISCRETION.

Appellants seek to bring themselves within subdivision (2) of paragraph (a) of Rule 24, Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, which permits intervention of right "when the representation of the applicant's interests by existing parties is or may be inadequate and the applicant is or may be bound by a judgment in the action."

Under this rule both inadequacy of representation and the fact that the applicant will be bound by the judgment must appear. See MacDonald v. U. S., 119 F. (2d), 821, 827 (C. C. A. 9th, 1941), modified on other grounds, 315 U. S. 262.

Appellants are not "inadequately represented" within the meaning of Rule 24. Allen Co. v. Cash Register Co., 322 U. S. 137. That rule applies to representative action such as class actions, stockholders' derivative suits, etc. United States v. Columbia Gas & Electric Corporation, 27 F. Supp. 116; app. dism. 108 F. (2d), 614; cert. den. 309 U. S. 687; 2 Moore Federal Practice (1938 Sec. 24.07).

These appellants are therefore not entitled to intervene as a matter of right. They do not urge that they come within the provisions of the Rule permitting intervention as a matter of discretion, but even if they did make such claim, they would fail.

Paragraph (b), Subdivision 2, of Rule 24 permits the District Court to allow intervention as a matter of discretion "when an applicant's claim or defense and the main action have a question of law or of fact in common." It further provides that "in exercising its discretion the Court shall consider whether the intervention will unduly delay or prejudice the adjudication of the rights of the original parties."

The appellants assert no claim or defense having questions of law or fact in common with the main action. And it is apparent that to permit the intervention might unduly delay or prejudice the adjudication of the rights of the original parties. There was ample ground for the denial of intervention as a matter of discretion and the exercise of that discretion may not be reviewed in the absence of clear abuse.

Allen Co. v. Cash Register Co., 322 U. S. 137;
Creditors Commutation Co. v. United States,
177 U. S. 311.

It is therefore respectfully submitted that this Court is without jurisdiction thereof and that this appeal should be dismissed summarily.

WHEREFORE, Loew's Incorporated, Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation, RKO Radio Pictures, Inc., Keith-Albee-Orpheum Corporation, RKO Proctor Corporation, RKO Midwest Corporation, Paramount Pictures, Inc., Paramount Film Distributing Corporation, Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc., Warner Bros. Pictures Distributing Corporation (sued herein as Vitagraph, Inc.), Warner Bros.

Circuit Management Corporation, Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation, and National Theatres Corporation move pursuant to the Rules of the Supreme Court of the United States for an order dismissing the appeal of American Theatres Association, Inc., et al. herein with costs.

Dated, New York, N. Y., March 13, 1947.

Respectfully submitted,

WHITNEY NORTH SEYMOUR,
LOUIS PHILLIPS,

JOINT BRIEF OF AMERICAN THEATRES ASSOCIATION, INC., ET AL., AND W. C. ALLRED, ET AL., INTERVENORS, OPPOSING THE SEPARATE MOTIONS OF TWENTIETH CENTURY-FOX, LOEW'S, RKO, PARAMOUNT AND WARNER DEFENDANT-RESPONDENTS, FOR AN ORDER DISMISSING APPEALS OF AMERICAN THEATRES ASSOCIATION, INC., ET AL. AND W. C. ALLIED, ET AL.

Statement of the Issues Involved

On December 31, 1946, the Court below entered its final decree in the above entitled proceedings. Paragraph 8 of Part II of that decree authorized and directed the defendants herein, who distribute approximately 70% of the feature pictures sold to independent theatres, to institute a program of uniform action confining the market in feature pictures to a competitive bidding system. At the hearing prior to the entrance of said decree, American Theatres Association, Inc., et al. and W. C. Allred, et al., hereinafter called intervenors, filed their separate motions for intervention in the Court below opposing competitive bidding as directed by the Court in its opinion.

Intervenors have appealed to this Court asking:

1. That the provision in this final decree requiring competitive bidding by uniform action of the defendants be reversed; and

2. That orders which the District Court entered after its decree had become final, denying intervenors leave to intervene, be reversed.

In connection with their appeals, intervenors filed in this Court two separate jurisdictional statements. The sufficiency of both of these statements is now attacked by defendants in joint motions to dismiss intervenors' appeals. The objections made to each of the jurisdictional statements are the same. For that reason intervenors file this joint brief in reply.

The allegations set out in both jurisdictional statements may be summarized as follows:

The decree of the Court has authorized and directed to the irreparable damage of intervenors the program of joint uniform concerted action to be taken by the major distributors of the pictures which intervenors must buy. That program in effect sets up, authorizes and approves a combination among the major distributors which would be unquestionably in restraint of trade if self-imposed without authorization by the Court. By the Court's approval of this judicial combination, the Court attempts to take away the legal rights of petitioners to enjoin the combination. Thus, the Court effectively denies intervenors in competitive areas access to a market in which they may purchase their feature films free from the plan of uniform control to be instituted by the defendants acting in reliance on the Court's decree.

The basis of intervention in the Court below is Rule 24 (a), subsection (2), Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. That rule provides for intervention of right "when the representation of the applicants' interest by existing parties is or may be inadequate, and the applicant is or may be bound by the judgment in the action." The jurisdictional statements filed by intervenors show that all of the requirements for intervention of right under the above quoted rules are satisfied, to wit:

The Representation of Intervenors' Interests in Opposing the Combination Restricting Their Market for Films Is Inadequate

The only party which could theoretically represent the interests of intervenors in establishing a free and unrestricted market for films was the Government. The Attorney General has voiced no objection to the enforced system of competitive bidding, as such. He presented no argument against the irreparable injury which such a system will impose on intervenors. Counsel for the Government indicated its willingness to try out a plan of competitive bidding in the event that it is unable to obtain the specific relief of divorcement. Intervenors are inadequately represented because the Attorney General has declined to permit or argue their objections to the plan.

The Requirement for Intervention as of Right, i. e., That "The Applicant Is or May Be Bound by a Judgment in the Action", Is Satisfied by the Jurisdictional Statements

It is apparent that the intervenors will be bound by the decree because:

1. They will be compelled to submit to the market regulations imposed by the uniform action required of distributors who control the greater portion of their supply of feature pictures.

2. Their present right to enjoin a combination controlling the market for feature film and compelling competitive bidding as the sole means of distribution, will be taken away; they will be unable to sue for damages on account of injury caused by the Court plan.

It can scarcely be argued that this will not be the effect of the decree, because any independent action taken by intervenors will be met by the defense that the defendants are acting in accordance with the directions of the District Court. It should be noted that the rule not only covers cases where the intervenors are bound as a matter of law, but also cases where they "may be bound".

Two Decisions of This Court, Both Directly in Point, Sustain Intervenors' Jurisdictional Statments

The principal cases on which intervenors rely in their jurisdictional statements are Missouri Kansas Pipe Line Co. v. U. S., 312 U. S. 502, 506-509, and U. S. v. Terminal R. R. Assoc. of St. Louis, 236 U. S. 194, 199.

In the Missouri Kansas Pipe Line case, the Court allowed intervention on the ground that Rule 24 covered those situations "where the enforcement of a public law * * * demands distinct safeguarding of private interests * * * the power to enforce rights thus sanctioned is not left to the public authorities, nor put in the keeping of the District Court's discretion". In that case intervention was permitted on the broad ground that the intervenors' "right to economic independence was at the heart of the controversy". This precise ground is spelled out in detail in both of the jurisdictional statements filed by intervenors. These statements show, and the brief in opposition does not controvert the fact that the entire business of petitioners is endangered if their access to the market is limited by a system imposed upon them which destroys all established relationships on which intervenors now depend for their pictures, and compels them to bid against each other and the major distributors for the benefit of the major distributors. All competition between sellers of pictures is eliminated. The jurisdictional statements further show that there are no reviewable criteria possible by which the successful bidder can be selected. The choice must, therefore, lie entirely within the uncontrolled business judgment of the defendants, who have already been held guilty of discrimination in violation of the Sherman Act.

The St. Louis Terminal case, above cited, is equally in point. The right of the intervenors in that case which this Court adjudicated on appeal was the same, in substance, as the right urged by intervenors here.

The only difference between the St. Louis Terminal case and the situation before the Court here is the technical one that in the St. Louis Terminal case, petitioners intervened directly in the Supreme Court of the United States. This difference is relied on by defendants. We consider it without substance. However, for the purpose of removing possible doubt, intervenors ~~have filed~~ intend to file an original motion to intervene in this Court similar to the one approved in the St. Louis Terminal case.

Analysis of Defendants' Objections to Intervenors' Jurisdictional Statements

1. It is argued that the order denying intervention is not a final decree, and hence may not be appealed to the Supreme Court under 15 U. S. C., Section 29.

The obvious answer is that intervenors appealed from the final decree entered by the Court on December 31, 1946, and from the order denying intervention made after the entry of that final decree, which bound intervenors and took away rights against the combination which they would otherwise have had. These facts make all of the cases cited by defendants on this point irrelevant. The cases principally relied on are cases of permissive intervention sought by parties not bound by a final decree. For example, in Allen v. Cash Register Co., 322 U. S. 137, the leading case cited by defendant, the intervenor in an anti-trust suit opposed the acquisition of the business of a competitor by the defendant. Such acquisition did not control or destroy intervenor's market. It did not affect him, except incidentally. The Court held there was no intervention of right under these circumstances. The Court further held that intervenor was adequately represented by the Government, which also opposed the acquisition. In its opinion this Court cited the Missouri Kansas Pipe Line Co. v. U. S. case, on which we relied, clearly implying that had the situation been as it was in that case, the action of the District Court on petitioner's intervention would have been subject to appeal. The situation of the intervenors here is the same as the intervenors in the Missouri Kansas Pipe Line case.

Defendants, in their motions to dismiss, attempt to distinguish the Missouri Kansas Pipe Line case on the ground that in that case the intervenors were designated by name in the Court's decree, while in the case before the Court their names are not given. There can be no substance to such a distinction. There was no doubt that the Court's decree binds all independent theatres in competitive areas because they are the only buyers of feature film in the market, aside from the defendants themselves. Furthermore, the opinion in the Missouri Kansas Pipe Line case is based, not on narrow technical considerations of names in the decree, but on the broad ground that persons whose rights are adversely affected by an anti-trust decree are entitled to protect them through intervention as of right.

U. S. v. California Cooperative Canneries, 279 U. S. 553, the second case cited, is not a case on appeal from an order denying intervention. It simply determines the lack of jurisdiction of the United States Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia under the Expediting Act. The dictum in the case on which defendants apparently rely refers to the old equity rule in force prior to the present Rule 24 of the Federal Rules of Procedure. Regardless of the accuracy of that dictum, there is no question today that Rule 24 has enlarged the former right to intervene. In a recent case, Cameron v. President & Fellows of Harvard College, 157 F. (2d) 993, C. C. A. 1st, Nov. 7, 1946, analyzing the appealability of an order denying an intervention of right, the Court of Appeals for the First Circuit said:

> "Certainly decisions denying applications to intervene as of right under paragraph (a) of the Rule are final (see Burrow v. Citizens' State Bank, 5 Cir., 74 F. (2d) 929, 930), since they purport ultimately to decide questions of substantive legal right. . . . The statement is made in some of the older cases that an order denying an application for leave to intervene > addressed to the discretion of the District Court is 'not of that final character' which furnishes 'the basis for appeal.'' City of New York v. Consolidated Gas Co., 253 U. S. 219, 221, 40 S. Ct. 511, 512, 64 L. Ed. 870 and cases cited. See also City of New York v. New York Tel. Co., 261 U. S. 312, 316, 43 S. Ct. 372, 67 L. Ed. 673; Allen Calculators, Inc. v. National Cash Register Co., 322 U. S. 137, 142, 64 S. Ct. 905, 88 L. Ed. 1188. Perhaps this statement may be warranted for the reason that only rarely, if ever, could it be shown that a District Court abused its discretion in denying permissive intervention. . . . However, we venture to question its verbal accuracy. Decisions reached by an exercise of judicial discretion ordinarily are reviewable, if they are final, although, of course, on appeal the scope of review is limited to the question of abuse of discretion.'' (Emphasis supplied.)

The Court went on to say, however, that an order refusing intervention is not a final and appealable order unless the applicant for intervention has no other adequate means of asserting his rights, citing Cresta Blanca Wine Co. v. Eastern Wine Corp., 143 F. (2d) 1012. That intervenors' position meets this test is amply demonstrated by the jurisdictional statements.

In the Cameron case the Court considered the intervenor's position with respect to each paragraph of Rule 24(a) separately and in the disjunctive and found that the intervenor was not entitled to relief under any one of them. Similarly, Sections 24.07 and 24.08, 2 Moore's Federal Practice, demonstrate clearly that the effect of Rule 24(a) is not to require an interest in a res as the sole ground for absolute intervention but rather is to designate it as one of three distinct grounds, any one of which gives intervention as of right. See also Mullins v. DeSoto Securities Co., 2 F. R. D. 502 (W. D. La., 1942), app. dismissed 136 F. (2d)

55 (C. C. A. 5th, 1943); Mack v. Passaic Nat. Bank & Trust Co., et al., 150 F. (2d) 474 (C. C. A. 3d, 1945) holding that one who has an absolute right to intervene under Rule 24(a) has an absolute right to appeal from an order denying intervention; Wolpe v. Poretsky, 144 F. (2d) 505 (App. D. C. 1944), cert. den. 323 U. S. 777, 65 S. Ct. 190 (1944), in which adjoining property owners in a suit to vacate a zoning order were held to have such a vital interest in the suit as to be entitled to intervention as of course even though they had applied for permissive intervention. Cf. Blumgart v. St. Louis-San Francisco Ry. Co., 94 F. (2d) 712 (C. C. A. 8th, 1938), cert. den. 304 U. S. 567, 58 S. Ct. 1041 (1938); Palmer v. Guaranty Trust Co. of New York, 111 F. (2d) 115 (C. C. A. 2d, 1940); U. S. v. American Surety Co. of New York, 142 F. (2d) 726 (C. C. A. 2d, 1944); Jenkins Petroleum Process Co. v. Credit Alliance Corp., 83 F. (2d) 532 (C. C. A. 10th, 1936); State of Washington v. U. S., 87 F. (2d) 421 (C. C. A. 9th, 1936).

The other cases cited by the defendants in an attempt to support dismissal of intervenors' appeals all involve situations which are not relevant here. They are either cases where there was no final judgment entered by the Court below, or cases where the right to intervene was permissive, and the Court did not abuse its discretion, or cases where the Court held that the intervenor was adequately represented and, therefore, did not satisfy this requirement of Rule 24. For example, St. Louis Amusement Co., et al. v. U. S., 326 U. S. 680, is a previous attempt at appeal in these same proceedings. The St. Louis Amusement Company intervened just after the former consent decree had been reopened. The purpose of the proceeding brought by the Government at that stage was to restore competition in the distribution of films. At the time there was no intimation by anyone that independent theatres would be injured or bound by the final decree. For that reason representation of independents by the Government was adequate at that time, and the Court so held. The Supreme Court dismissed the appeal on the authority of the California Canneries and Allen cases, supra, since there was not only no final decree at the time, but none was even in prospect.

2. The second contention of defendants is that intervenors have no direct and immediate interest in any res which is the subject of the suit.

In a technical sense, there is no res in any anti-trust action to break up a combination in restraint of trade. The effect of this argument is, therefore, that no intervention is ever possible in an anti-trust action. Such an argument flies directly in the face of Rule 24 (a) (2). It is also contrary to the only case directly in point prior to the rule, the St. Louis Terminal case. In a broader sense, as we pointed out above, the Court has subjected the entire business of intervenors to its order, and has to that extent taken control over the operation of their theatres in a most vital and essential respect.

Moreover, as pointed out above in discussing the Cameron case, the requirement of a direct and immediate interest in a res which is the subject of the suit is limited to intervention as of right under Rule 24 (a) (3) and need not be demonstrated in perfecting the right to intervene under Rule 24 (a) (2).

3. Defendants urge that the orders denying leave to intervene does not prevent intervenors from instituting independent suits to enforce whatever rights they may possess.

This statement is in contradiction to the facts stated in petitioners' jurisdictional statements. The intent and purpose of the Court's order was to set up a plan of action common to all distributors to enforce competitive bidding. Clearly, if any intervenor seeks to enjoin that combination or to collect damages from defendants on account of their activities pursuant to the plan authorized by the Court, he will be met with the defense that defendants are required by the Court to carry out this system of uniform action.

For example, suppose that through the enforcement of the uniform competitive bidding system, film rentals are forced so high that many of these intervenors find their profits destroyed. Or suppose that on account of the exercise of the uncontrolled business judgment of the defendants in selecting successful bidders, many of these intervenors find their theatres unable to operate for lack of features. Or suppose through the operation of the system, a theatre is unable to assure itself of a future supply of features, which assurance is necessary for its financial solvency. In these situations any independent who brought a suit would be barred by the decree from a recovery.

The only answer would be that the Court below exceeded its jurisdiction. But certainly the District Court intends its decree to be a bar to any action by an independent which seeks relief inconsistent with its provisions—and there can be no question of the jurisdiction of that Court.

For example, in St. Louis Amusement Co., et al. v. Paramount Pictures, Inc., et al., 61 F. S. 854 (E. D. Mo. 1945), the District Court in St. Louis upheld the decree of the New York Court with some reluctance, but as a matter of comity. Even though the decree of the District Court could immediately be reversed by another Court, the defendants would have a complete defense for all their interim activities taken on the authority and order of the Court below.

4. In their motions to dismiss defendants argue that intervenors are not inadequately represented within the meaning of the rule because Rule 24 applies only to the class actions, stockholders' derivative suits, etc.

It is sufficient to say that no support for such an argument can be found in the rule or in the cases cited. Furthermore, the Supreme Court of the United States has held directly to the contrary in the Missouri Kansas Pipe Line case above cited, where Mr. Justice FRANKFURTER, speaking for the Court, said:

> "Where the enforcement of a public law . . . demands distinct safeguarding of private interests . . . the power to enforce rights thus sanctioned is not left to the public authorities, nor put in the keeping of the District Courts' discretion."

5. Finally, defendants argue that intervenors have no claim or defense having questions of law or fact in common with the main action, and that to permit intervention might unduly delay or prejudice the adjudication of the rights of the original parties.

This contention is contrary to the facts of the jurisdictional statements. We need not argue the point, however, because this ground of objection can relate only to permissive intervention. It has nothing to do with the provision of Rule 24 (a) (2), relating to intervention as of right.

6. Defendants argue that if any single defendant, acting by itself, and not in pursuance of a plan adopted by all defendants, sold pictures on competitive bidding, intervenors would have no complaint.

This may be true. But in such a case independents could induce other major distributors to sell on other terms. And if they were free to do so, it is scarcely conceivable that all of them would uniformly refuse, in the absence of collusive action. It is the enforced uniform plan, adopted by all defendants on order of the Court which is the essense of both the wrong and the injury to intervenors. Even if voluntary competitive bidding were invoked by a number of defendants acting individually, necessary alterations and concessions could be made as occasions arose to meet changing economic conditions. The court system imposes a rigid strait-jacket on the industry for the entire future so long as the decree stands.

Conclusion

To deny intervention in the present case is to subject intervenors to irreparable injury resulting from the Court's decree without an opportunity to be heard. The defendants who are objecting to giving intervenors an opportunity to defend their rights in court are the very persons who will benefit by a plan of united action sanctioned by the Court which would be illegal without that sanction. The united front which the decree directs the defendants to take against the intervenors destroys intervenors' power to bargain individually to protect themselves against the enhanced prices which defendants will be able to obtain through competitive bidding after the destruction of existing commercial relationships with independents. No reason, apart from technicalities which we believe we have sufficiently answered, is advanced by the defendants to support the grave injustice of denying a hearing to intervenors. Defendants' statement that intervention will delay or complicate the litigation is obviously specious. Intervenors do not seek to introduce new evidence. They ask no part in the litigation except to protect their rights against the unlawful and harmful provisions of the decree.

It is, therefore, respectfully submitted that this Court have jurisdiction of the intervenors' appeal and of the order denying intervention and that the motions to dismiss the separate appeals of these intervenors should be denied.

BRIEF OF AMERICAN THEATRES ASSOCIATION, INC., ET AL.

OPINIONS BELOW.

The opinions delivered in the court below from which the appeal in No. 85 is taken are reported in 66 F. Supp. 323 and 70 F. Supp. 53. The petition to intervene in Nos. 79-84 is an original petition now pending before this Court.

GROUNDS OF JURISDICTION.

The appeal in No. 85 is taken pursuant to 15 U. S. C. § 29. The original petition to intervene in this Court is based on U. S. v. Terminal Association of St. Louis, 236 U. S. 194.

STATEMENT OF THE CASE.

American Theatres Association, Inc., Southern California Theatre Owners Association, and a number of exhibitors of motion pictures, have appealed from the decision of the District Court denying its right to intervene in that court and from the provisions of Part II, Paragraph 8, of that court's decree of December 31, 1946, instituting a system of competitive bidding for the distribution of motion picture films. They have also filed an original petition in this Court to intervene in Nos. 79-84 for the purpose of presenting their objections to the provisions relating to competitive bidding.

In Part II, Paragraph 8, of the decree of December 31, 1946, defendants are enjoined as follows:

> 8. From licensing in the future any feature for exhibition in any theatre, not its own, in any manner except the following:
>
> (a) A license to exhibit each feature released for public exhibition in any competitive area shall be offered to the operator of each theatre in such area who desires to exhibit it on some run [other than that upon which such feature is to be exhibited in the theatre of the licensor] selected by such operator, and upon uniform terms;
>
> (b) Each license shall be granted solely upon the merits and without discrimination in favor of affiliates, old customers or others;
> (c) Where a run is desired, or is to be offered, upon terms which exclude simultaneous exhibition in competing theatres, the distributor shall notify, not less than thirty days in advance of the date when bids will be received, all exhibitors in the competitive area, offering to license the features upon one or more runs, and in such offer shall state the amount of a flat rental as the minimum for such license for a specified number of days of exhibition, the time when the exhibition is to commence and the availability and clearance, if any, which will be granted for each such run. Within fifteen days after receiving such notice, any exhibitor in such competitive area may bid for such license, and in his bid shall state what run such exhibitor desires and what he is willing to pay for such feature, which statement may specify a flat rental, or a percentage of gross receipts, or both, or any other form of rental, and shall also specify what clearance such exhibitor is willing to accept, the time and days when such exhibitor desires to exhibit it, and any other offers which such exhibitor may care to make. The distributor may reject all offers made for any such feature, but in the event of the acceptance of any, the distributor shall grant such license upon the run bid for to the highest responsible bidder, having a theatre of a size, location and equipment adequate to yield a reasonable return to the licensor. The method of licensing specified in this subdivision shall not be required in areas where there is no competition among theatres or in run, or in which there is no offer made by any exhibitor within the time above mentioned. The words "exclude simultaneous exhibition" shall be held to mean the exhibition of a specified run in one theatre with clearance over other theatres in the competitive area. The words "competitive area" shall refer to the territory occupied by more than one theatre in which it may fairly and reasonably be said that such theatres compete with each other for the exhibition of features on any run.

(e) A theatre is not a defendant's own theatre unless it owns therein a legal or equitable interest of ninety-five per cent or more, either directly or through affiliates or subsidiaries.

Our principal objections go to sub-Paragraph (c) of the injunction quoted above.

QUESTIONS PRESENTED.

A. Did the court below err in refusing to grant appellants intervention as of right?

B. Should this Court grant appellants' intervention as of right in Nos. 79-84?

C. Is the requirement of auction bidding imposed by the court below an invalid exercise of that court's power?

ARGUMENT.

I.

THE STANDING OF APPELLANTS TO INTERVENE AND TO MAINTAIN THIS APPEAL.

The standing of American Theatres Association, Inc., et al, to intervene in the court below and to take this appeal has been questioned by a motion to dismiss, the determination of which has been postponed to the hearing on the merits (——— U. S. ———, 67 S. Ct. 1752).

The motion for leave to intervene was brought under Rule 24 (a) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure which provides that "when the representation of the applicant's interest by existing parties is or may be inadequate and the applicant is or may be bound by a judgment in the action" there shall be intervention of right.[1] The following cases support intervenors' right to appeal from the order denying their motion to intervene:[2]

[1] Said Rule 24 (a) reads as follows:

> "Intervention of Right. Upon timely application anyone shall be permitted to intervene in an action: (1) when a statute of the United States confers an unconditional right to intervene; or (2) when the representation of the applicant's interest by existing parties is or may be inadequate and the applicant is or may be bound by a judgment in the action; or (3) when the applicant is so situated as to be adversely affected by a distribution or other disposition of property in the custody of the court or of an officer thereof."

[2] See also U. S. v. Crescent Amusement Co., 323 U. S. 173; U. S. v. Bausch & Lomb Co., 321 U. S. 707.

Missouri-Kansas Pipe Line Co. v. U. S., 312 U. S. 502;
U. S. v. Terminal Assn. of St. Louis, 236 U. S. 194;
Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen v. Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Company, —— U. S. ——, 67 S. Ct. 1387. Decided June 9, 1947;
Wolpe v. Poretsky, 144 F. 2d 505.

Rule 24 (a) providing for intervention of right applies to the situation of the appellant-intervenors for the following reasons: Intervenors include both associations of motion picture theatres and individual motion picture exhibitors. They are compelled to buy the pictures produced by the defendants in order to stay in business because, as the court found, these defendants distribute over 70% of the feature films. The section of the decree from which we appeal (Section 8 (c) of Part II) authorizes and requires these major distributors to engage in a preconceived program of uniform and concerted action which regulates and controls the selling of films to appellant-intervenors, and restricts the independent competitive activity which any one of the major distributors would otherwise be free to take.

It is obvious that if the defendants themselves undertook to combine in order to carry out the preconceived plan of uniform and concerted action suggested by the court in order to control the market for film, any one of the appellant-intervenors would have a remedy against the major distributors under the antitrust laws. In other words, the Court is attempting to legalize an otherwise illegal plan for concerted action to regulate the market for films. Appellant-intervenors are more than incidentally affected by the decree. It takes away their existing legal remedies against concerted action by those who dominate the market. The decree if affirmed will, therefore, be binding on them as a matter of law.

As the Court said in Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen v. Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Co., supra, at 1390:

"Ordinarily, in the absence of an abuse of discretion, no appeal lies from an order denying leave to intervene where intervention is a permissive matter within the discretion of the Court. United States v. California Co-op. Canneries, 279 U. S. 553, 556, 49 S. Ct. 423, 424, 73 L. Ed. 838. The permissive nature of such intervention necessarily implies that, if intervention is denied, the applicant is not legally bound or prejudiced by any judgment that might be entered in the case. He is at liberty to assert and protect his interests in some more appropriate proceeding." (Emphasis supplied.)

The other cases cited above go even further than required to support appellant-intervenors' right to intervene and appeal. For example, in U. S. v. Terminal Association of St. Louis, supra, this Court said that third parties were entitled to be heard on intervention in connection with an antitrust decree "insofar as it might operate prejudicially to their rights." In Missouri-Kansas Pipe Line Co. v. U. S., supra, the Court said "But where the enforcement of a public law also demands distinct safeguarding of private interests by giving them a formal status in the decree, the power to enforce rights thus sanctioned is not left to the public authorities nor put in the keeping of the district court's discretion."[3]

The inadequacy of the representation of the interest of appellant intervenors is equally clear. Some mild dissent to the plan has been voiced by the defendants, but it can scarcely be argued that appellant intervenors' interests are adequately represented by those found guilty of conspiring to discriminate against them. The government which is the natural party to protect appellant intervenors has not only voiced no objection but actually indicated its willingness to try out the plan.

Further, no proof has been introduced into this record showing the economic problems with which independent exhibitors are confronted in the licensing of motion pictures.

[3] Cf. Evens & Howard Fire Brick Company, et al. v. United States, 236 U. S. 210; United States v. California Co-operative Canneries, 279 U. S. 553, 556.

The absence of any such proof in this record would seem to show beyond peradventure of a doubt that the interests of exhibitors have not been adequately represented in this case, thus making obvious the right of intervention which is here being sought.

II.

OUR STANDING ON OUR PETITION FOR DIRECT INTERVENTION IN THIS COURT.

Appellant intervenors have also filed a petition for intervention in this Court conforming exactly to the precedent set by U. S. v. Terminal Association of St. Louis, 236 U. S. 194, 199. That case held that third parties were entitled to be heard by intervention in this Court concerning the settlement of an antitrust decree "insofar as it might operate prejudicially to their rights". Here, as we have shown, the decree below approving an otherwise illegal combination has cut off appellant intervenors' legal right to proceed under the antitrust laws against such a combination as effectively as the legal rights of the intervenors were cut off in the St. Louis Terminal case.

III.

THE REQUIREMENT OF AUCTION BIDDING IS AN INVALID EXERCISE OF THE COURT'S POWER AND WILL, IF ENFORCED, CAUSE IRREPARABLE INJURY TO APPELLANT INTERVENORS AND ALL OTHER INDEPENDENT EXHIBITORS OF MOTION PICTURES.

A. The Failure of the Decree to Accomplish the Purpose the Court Intended.

The purpose of the lower court in setting up competitive bidding for films is clear from the opinion. It had found a number of discriminatory and restrictive practices on the part of the defendant producers and distributors and their exhibitor affiliates which were directed against independent exhibitors. It desired to prevent this discrimination without at the same time requiring divestiture of the defendants' theatres. The court apparently thought that if everyone were given a chance to bid and films were sold in no other way than by auction bidding discrimination would be impossible.

The court of course could not give direct orders to the independent exhibitors who were not parties as to how they should buy. It could nevertheless control this buying by controlling the defendants who produced over 70% of the feature films. Since no exhibitor can survive without buying a major portion of his product from these defendants, an order against them can in practical effect substantially control and regulate not only the defendants but also the exhibitors who had no voice in these proceedings. The court took advantage of this situation to impose judicial regulation over the entire industry. Its decree affects appellant intervenors in the following way:

1. It compels the buyers in the market for films to submit to market regulations formulated by the court and enforced by the concerted action of sellers who control the major part of the supply.

2. It takes away from appellant intervenors their former right to enjoin such concerted action on the part of the defendants.

3. It takes away from appellant intervenors their former right to recover damages under the antitrust laws on a showing that the operation of the plan has caused them injury.

4. It authorizes and compels the major distributors to break off established relationships with independents which have no taint of illegality whatever.

No doubt, the court was moved by the belief that the limited type of competition involved in enforced auction bidding would be fairer than uncontrolled free competitive activity. But this is an economic judgment which the court had no power to make. Congress has not, and indeed it could not, delegate the broad power to make competition fairer by restricting competitive activity. A. L. A. Schechter Poultry Corp. v. United States, 295 U. S. 495.

Not only was the economic judgment of the court invalid as a matter of law; it was equally faulty as a practical solution for the evils existing in the industry. Instead of decreasing the monopoly power of the defendants it increases it. Instead of putting independents in a better bargaining position it leaves them worse than they were before. The primary impact of the decree is not upon the defendants who receive the bids but upon the independents who are required to bid against one another. If auction bidding were possible or appropriate in this industry—which we do not believe—the court's purpose could be carried out only by compelling the defendants to bid against each other for the playing time of independent exhibitors. Only in this way could mandatory auction bidding operate against the wrongdoers and in favor of their innocent victims. The decree will in practice be a requirement that independent exhibitors struggle and compete among themselves for the scarce supply of pictures produced and controlled by a few industrial giants.

An illustration from another field may be helpful. Sometime ago, great financial houses in New York, of which Morgan Stanley was a leader, effectively controlled the underwriting of utility securities. The utility companies had little bargaining power in the sale of their own securities. Financial houses which had a special position with the various utilities absolutely determined which houses would purchase or underwrite the securities; the prices at which they would be sold; the spreads or profits to the banking houses, etc. For the purpose of correcting these abuses competitive bidding was made mandatory. But the persons who were guilty of the restraints—the banking houses—were required to compete among themselves for the securities, and the victims—the utility companies—were the beneficiaries of the higher prices and better terms which were obtained by the competitive bidding. The remedy in that situation was adapted to the evil; and the persons upon whom the impact of the regulation was most severe were the persons whose restrictive practice came under governmental condemnation. Cf. Rule U-50, S. E. C., and Morgan Stanley & Co. v. S. E. C., 126 F. 2d 325 (C. C. A. 2d, 1942).

Competitive bidding is not new. It has been tried before in many contexts. But it has always been used as a device to protect the recipient of the bids against the bidders. Thus, competitive bidding on government projects is designed to prevent the Government from being imposed on by the bidders. And this is true whether it is the disposal of surplus property owned by the Government or the procurement of property by the Government. It is the Government which receives the bids. Thus, to take contrasting examples, when the purchasing agent of the Treasury asks for sealed bids for a specified number of automobile tires, he is trying to secure the requisite supply as cheaply as possible. And when the War Assets Administration attempts to dispose of a lot of automobile tires by auction sale, it is attempting to secure as high a price as possible. The present proposal is the first which has come to our knowledge which attempts to protect a weaker party by requiring the weak to bid against the weak for the favor of the strong.

As applied to the motion picture industry the effects of the practice stand out sharply. The exhibitors, by competing against each other, bid up the price of the rights which are being sold. The producer-distributors, by calling for the bids, attempt to extract from each license all the traffic can be made to bear. The scheme moves towards raising the floor under prices rather than lowering the ceiling over them. It is a device which obtains for the already powerful producers a price which is the utmost the weaker exhibitor can be made to pay.

The practices of the defendants which have been attacked before this Court are monopolistic and discriminatory practices designed primarily to aid and promote the theatre interests which are owned or controlled by the defendants. The Court has not seen fit to decree dissolution of the defendants' ownership of theatres. On the propriety of this decision, these intervening petitioners take no position and make no suggestions. But we do insist that the alternative selected by the court is neither appropriate nor permissible. It assures the very instruments of monopoly—the theatres owned or controlled by defendants—a basic supply of pictures and at the same time deprives the independent exhibitor of any possibility of securing for himself by orderly and historic negotiations and contract arrangements the supply of pictures which he needs.

B. Auction Bidding in the Motion Picture Industry Will Not Restore Free Competition But Will Lead to Its Further Destruction.

1. The purposes of the Sherman Act.

The Sherman Act, under which this suit was brought, has been declared by Mr. Chief Justice Hughes to be a "charter of freedom." See Sugar Institute, Inc. v. U. S., 297 U. S. 553, 600 (1936). In specific terms it seeks to outlaw every monopoly, and every contract, combination, and conspiracy in restraint of trade. Its aim is to impose a legal ban upon economic tyranny, to prevent the domination of the weak by the strong, to insure to industrial rivalry a fair field and no favors, to put an end to industrial vassalage in all its forms. It is, as Mr. Justice Stone has put it, the very "power" to fix prices, to dictate the terms of the bargain, to compel a result which could not be won in fair mercantile battle which is the test of restraint. See U. S. v. Trenton Potteries Co., 273 U. S. 392 (1927). See also U. S. v. Socony-Vacuum Oil Co., 310 U. S. 150 (1940).

These are the general objectives of public policy in this litigation to be realized, within the concrete operation of the motion-picture industry, by protecting independent exhibitors and breaking the hold of the combination by the defendants. In its desire to prevent discrimination in the sale of feature pictures, the Court below has, we contend, unwittingly suggested a form of decree which will not meet the purposes of the antitrust laws because it will not and cannot create an open market in the distribution of pictures. It will rather increase the monopoly power of the defendants and weaken the position of the independent exhibitor.

2. The relation of Bidding to Competition.

There is a deceptive assurance in the resort to auction bidding. It is based on the assumption that competition is created where open bidding is required. Actually competition and auction bidding are not identical. In most situations they have little relationship with each other. The ordinary purpose of competitive bidding is to prevent a person in a fiduciary capacity from favoring some individual contractor to the detriment of the public or the persons whom he represents. The device is a safeguard to prevent persons who act, not for themselves, but for others from betraying their trust.

But this is as far as it goes. It does not of itself—and cannot—create a competitive market. It has in practice repeatedly proved itself to be an invitation to collusion among the parties from whom bids are sought. The large cigarette companies have for years been accustomed to use the auction market to depress the price paid to the growers for leaf tobacco. American Tobacco Co. v. U. S., 147 F. 2d. 93, aff'd. 328 U. S. 781. The federal government has complained to the courts that on numerous occasions the bids submitted to it were collusive bids. U. S. v. Cooper Corporation, 312 U. S. 600. And the State of Georgia, voicing similar allegations, has been permitted to go into court to seek triple damages. Georgia v. Evans, 316 U. S. 159.

Auction bidding does not in any way remove the handicap of those bidders who are in an inferior bargaining position.

3. The Inequality of Bargaining Power between the Defendants and Independent Exhibitors.

In the situation before the Court we are faced with a gross inequality in bargaining position. The defendants have great economic power. The exhibitors are largely weak and unorganized. This inequality is aggravated by the fact that exhibitors must buy in a seller's market where the amount of product is declining and the demand for it greater than the supply.

Furthermore, the tendency in the industry as it is now organized is toward even greater scarcity. As the record of this case shows, the business of producing motion pictures is not open to all who wish to take its chances. It requires large capital but more important is the fact that newcomers may expect to have great difficulty in distributing their product because of the present producer control of distribution.

The effect is apparent from the production figures. In 1937 a year of depression when purchasing power was low some 437 pictures were released by all producers. In the season 1945-46, a year of tremendous purchasing power and packed houses, only 445 pictures were released by all producers which in no way caught up to the increased demand. In the comparable season of 1946-47 the pictures released were reduced to 426. As is pointed out in the brief amicus curiae submitted on behalf of the Conference of Independent Exhibitors Associations the Court's findings do not reflect the gradual reduction in the number of films annually released by the defendants. This brief goes on to say:

> "Finding No. 99 shows that during the 1943-1944 season the eight defendants together released 260 feature films, exclusive of 'westerns.' The affiliated first-run and key neighborhood theatres by reason of extended runs (a 'smash hit' will sometimes be held over for three or four weeks) and move-overs, do not require as many feature pictures as the independent subsequent-run and small town theatres. Theatres of the latter class commonly change their programs two or three times a week, thus requiring from 104 to 156 features a year. Most of them are compelled by competitive conditions or custom to show double features; that is two feature pictures on every program. And in many instances the exhibitor must split the available product with a competitor having the same run.

"It is apparent, therefore, that so far as the independent subsequent-run and small town theatres are concerned, there is a serious product shortage."

Under these circumstances the freedom of the exhibitor to shop around and to deal with the major producers on any sort of an equal bargaining basis is severely limited. He must, whatever his run—first, move-over, second, third, revival or nondescript—depend for his "features" upon a small number of major companies which in the near past, as the court below has found, have been operating in close accord. The major companies, however, are under no such compulsion to deal. However indispensable they are to the exhibitors, the patronage of no exhibitor is indispensable to any one of them. The conditions under which competition insures a "charter of freedom" do not—and under the Court's decree as now written—cannot prevail in the motion-picture industry. Within the framework of such a situation competitive bidding will perpetuate the very inequities it is meant to correct.

For the belief that auction bidding will itself break restraints revealed in this litigation there is neither warrant or authority. Competitive bidding instead of removing the coercive use of power by the defendants will force the weaker units of the industry into ruinous competition with each other. It will not compel competition among the sellers except when they are dealing with large chains of exhibitors. This means the progressive elimination of independent exhibitors. The decree will thus defeat rather than correct the objectives which it is invoked to secure.

4. Auction Bidding Will Strengthen the Defendants' Monopoly Position and Weaken the Position of Independent Exhibitors by Destroying Existing Relationships.

Examination of the consequences of the decree in operation make it clear that what was intended by the court below as a system to protect the exhibitor against the massed economic power of the distributor-exhibitor defendants will instead be a weapon in the hands of the distributor-exhibitor defendants for further concentration of power and monopolization of the industry to the detriment of the independent exhibitor.

Independent motion picture exhibitors operating one or two theaters seek, need, and desire, just as any other merchant, a known supply or inventory of products upon which they can rely as the need for it arises. Thus if he were permitted to buy a season's supply of product from producers, the quality of whose product is generally known, this need would be substantially met. Having thus acquired the right to needed product upon terms settled in advance as to playing, position, clearance, source, run and the like, the independent exhibitor could then proceed to devote himself to the more efficient operation of his theater and to those qualities of showmanship which constitute the very heart of his business. As a result of the present litigation an independent exhibitor's right and opportunity to so operate his theater and his business has been completely removed.

The only existing restraints upon the monopoly pressure of the major defendants to absorb all exhibition into their orbit are: (1) The moral pressure of long established business relationships and the condemnation of the business community which would result from disruption of such relationships; and (2) the threat of prosecution under the antitrust laws. The decree requiring auction selling will remove both these obstacles to complete monopoly. Auction selling specifically requires disregard of established business relationships. Cf. the decree below II(8)(b) and II(8)(c). Taking product away from independents by use of buying power and high bids in accordance with the Court's decree would carry out the monopoly objectives of the defendants but the decree would effectively immunize them against prosecution or civil suit under the antitrust laws.

The present status of the industry involves many situations in which independent exhibitors and independent chains have, by long custom, been able to find partial shelter from the monopolistic practices of the defendants. They have made arrangements with the defendants which assure them of a continuous supply of product sufficient to operate their theatres. Many of them have suffered serious disadvantages as a result of the restraints imposed by the defendants, but they have so far been able to operate. Instead of freeing them from the restraints now in existence the proposed form of sale of film would result in destroying whatever stability remains in the industry. An independent theatre with established sources of supply cannot, under the decree, insist on the continuance of those sources of supply. It is at the mercy of the economic power of its competitors to cut off that source of supply or to buy up the most desirable film. This is true particularly where the competition is a theatre owned by the defendants. It may be true to a lesser extent where the competition is that of a stronger chain or other independent. (See infra, p. 19.)

It is true that at present established business relationships do not constitute an assurance of a continued supply of products. However, they have the sanction of the mores of the industry and, should those fail, are reinforced by the sanction of the antitrust laws. Thus, should a defendant company now attempt to deprive a competing independent first run theatre of its product by interfering with its established business relations, there is no question that an antitrust suit could be successfully prosecuted to restrain the practice and for damages. Thus, business mores and the antitrust laws have combined to permit the independent exhibitor to continue operation under serious disadvantages as a result of defendants' restraints but nevertheless to continue in business. Under the proposed decree the defendants would not only not be restrained from attempting to take desirable product away from independent competitors, they would be encouraged to do so. Distributors supplying independents would now be required under the decree to attempt to sell their product to defendant-owned theatres if such threatres should outbid the independent; and if complaint were made that the defendants were enhancing their monopoly by use of the competitive bidding process, there would be available to them the defense that what they have done is sanctioned if not compelled by court decree.

Thus what has been an illegal conspiracy imposing restraints on independent exhibitors will now operate openly and with full sanction of law. The result will be deterioration of the position of the independent exhibitor. An assured supply of product and economic power will tend to make defendant-owned theatres or large chains the only theatres which can operate at a profit under the bidding system. A situation will be created in which a theatre operating as an independent is unprofitable while, if owned by a defendant or a large chain, it would prove to be a valuable money making property. Competitive bidding is not, as the Court supposed, a method of introducing competition in the industry; rather it is a highway to a new and further concentration of economic power.

5. The Decree Gives the Defendants a Further Advantage by Allowing Them to Preempt Their Own Pictures.

The program of auction bidding also imposes other competitive disadvantages on independents as against theatres owned by the defendants. Individual exhibitors will be required to bid for every picture and can show only such pictures as they have obtained by successful bidding. The theatres owned by the defendants will not be under the same handicap. Rather, they will be free to take their own pictures and exhibit them without giving any independent an opportunity to obtain them. Under present conditions the defendants exhibit their own pictures for about 20% to 50% of the playing time in their own theatres. (R. 3687, 3688; Findings No. 135-138, 144). Under the bidding system they can, if necessary, extend the use of their own pictures substantially.

Furthermore, with a backlog of pictures of their own to assure them that their theatres are in no danger of standing idle, as are the theatres of the independents, the theatres owned by the defendants will be in a strong position to use the great financial power of their entire producer-exhibitor combination to bid for the best pictures of other producers and to pay higher prices than independent exhibitors can afford. Even the largest independent chains will have difficulty coping with the massed economic power of the majors.

6. The Hardships the Decree Will Impose on Independents.

The situation of the ordinary exhibitors is more precarious than that of the chain. He must have at least 104 pictures to keep his theatre running if he changes his bill twice a week. In subsequent runs, it is frequently essential that bills be changed three times and even more a week. In many places, such as Boston, Los Angeles, and New York, the public expects double features and with two or three changes a week, a theatre requires between 208 and 312 pictures a year. Competitive bidding will accentuate the struggle for product and strengthen the hand of the producer while further weakening the position of the exhibitor. A graphic example of the power given the majors can be seen in Lawrence, Massachusetts. The situation in that city can be duplicated in many other places,—Bayonne, New Jersey, Buffalo, New York, for example.

In Lawrence, Massachusetts, the Capitol is an independent theatre owned by one of your intervening petitioners. It is a first-run theatre operating in competition with four theatres owned by Warner Bros., two of which are first-run houses—one a move-over first-run house and one a second-run house. All of these theatres are larger than the Capitol theatre. At the present time the Capitol theatre is able to obtain sufficient quality product to operate. This is a result of well established business relationships and perhaps in part to the fear that any other course would subject Warner Bros. to the sanctions of the antitrust laws. Under a bidding system, however, the result would be that the massed buying power of Warner Bros. would deprive the Capitol theatre of first-run rights in all pictures which Warner Bros. felt had any chance of success. It would leave the Capitol theatre only those pictures believed fated to be failures. As a result the Capitol theatre would become a second-run house at best, and even on second-run the Capitol theatre could not compete with Warner's second-run house for the more desirable pictures produced by the defendants.

Competitive bidding will have a substantially similar effect where the individual independent exhibitor or small chain is in competition, not with a defendant-exhibitor, but with a large chain. For the buying power of a large chain would have the same effect as the buying power of the defendant exhibitor in depriving the independent of first-run product and leaving him only with such subsequent runs as the large chain could not use. This is an invitation to the extension of chains to the point of monopoly, a result not only not desirable under the antitrust laws but a result which it is the object of those laws to prevent. See Interstate Circuit v. U. S., 306 U. S. 208; U. S. v. Schine Chain Theatres, Inc., 63 Fed. Supp. 229 (W. D. N. Y. 1945), appeal pending, No. 10 this term.

The Court apparently believes that some of these objections which have been advanced against competitive bidding would be removed by the provision that it may be that if is necessary "only where it is desired by the exhibitors." However this fails to take into account the fact that many exhibitors are affiliates of the defendants and that "where it is desired by the exhibitors" is the equivalent of "where it is desired by the defendants." Furthermore, even where a defendant-affiliated exhibitor is not the one who makes a request for such bidding, the defendants have sufficient influence even among independents as a result of the great power they possess over the business of each exhibitor that it would be an extremely simple matter in almost every competitive area for a request for competitive bidding to be initiated by an ostensibly independent exhibitor whenever the defendants so desired.

In this connection it is highly significant that every association of exhibitors of importance is opposed to the Court's program for auction bidding. They appeared before the court below and have appeared in this Court amicus curiae to protest. Likewise the Society of Independent Motion Picture Producers has filed its brief against the plan.

C. Under the Decree the Court Will be Under a Duty to Hear Complaints Arising From the Sale of Pictures Which Amount to a Pervasive Supervision of Details of Motion Picture Selling. Yet the Standards Determining the Best Bid Are so Vague and General that it Will Be the Defendants Who Actually Control the Administration of this Judicially Regulated Market.

It needs the citation of no authorities to support the proposition that courts should be reluctant to regulate the detailed operation of an industry under the guise of enforcing the antitrust laws. Yet such constant supervision of thousands of transactions relating to the sale of pictures would be necessary if the decree is to be any real protection against discrimination. There are so many factors which the court has indicated are proper considerations to determine the best bid that every transaction is a potential cause for judicial action.

Yet in administering the auction selling provision of the decree the court will in effect be compelled to accept the business judgment of the defendants on the question of whether they are actually accepting the best bids because the standards which determine the best bids are too vague and general to permit effective review. We have here that worst of combinations: unwarranted judicial interference, without the possibility of an effective judicial remedy.

Presumably the court thought that the highest bid system would prevent favoritism by the defendants toward individual buyers of films. The fact is that the peculiar character of the product sold will create new opportunities for favoritism under auction bidding. The sale of the right to exhibit a film in a theatre is not like the sale of an ordinary commodity. The factors which determine (under the court's plan) the best bid for the exclusive right to show the picture for a limited period of time are highly uncertain. Their relative value depends solely on a business judgment which cannot, as a practical matter, be reviewed unless it is so bad that it can be called arbitrary and capricious. There is the location of the theatre, the type of people who patronize it, the good will of the exhibitor in the community, the length of run which he offers, the clearance over other theatres, the time of exhibition, the type of exhibition, the ability of the exhibitor successfully to advertise the picture, and so on. The normal procedure of renting feature films for a percentage of the gross receipts adds other factors such as the size of the theatre. Where and how a picture will net the most money for a defendant who offers it for competitive bidding on all these factors is only a guess. Hence the court allows the defendants to reject all bids if it desires. Thus, the effect of the plan is to enable any defendant to favor any exhibitor, including affiliates of other defendants, and receive protection from the decree unless its business judgment is so obviously bad it can be called capricious. In other words the decree sets up a defendant-controlled scheme of regulations for the industry.

For example the decree states that a picture is to be leased to "the highest responsible bidder." But "highest" depends upon a standard, and can be determined against dispute only if all offers are "spot" and for "cash." If the price is to be a percentage of the gross receipts of the successful bidder, in accordance with prevailing custom in the industry, the cash equivalent cannot be known until after the picture is shown. A procedure for commuting percentage of take into cash involves an advance estimate of the drawing power of the film. And the ordinary motion-picture is far too uncertain in its popular appeal to allow even an approach to precision. A minor complication is that the price of admission is for a composite of a feature, a comic, a news reel, and in certain localities a second feature, and expectations and receipts must alike be allocated between the offerings.

The "responsibility" of the bidder is likewise not beyond dispute. A minimum norm might be fixed and all exhibitors excluded from the bidding who did not measure up. But responsibility is usually a relative matter depending upon the importance or the value of the thing at stake. In respect to motion pictures it would seem reasonable to set different standards of responsibility for first, second, and third run exhibitors. If, however, that were done, the demand for responsibility would result in a classification of theatres. Or a bidder might be allowed to make up in responsibility for the deficit in his bid over that of his competitor. Nor can the question of by whom responsibility is to be judged be escaped. It is a common practice within the business community to allege the lack of responsibility of a party with whom one does not choose to deal.

A host of kindred questions attend the exact definition of the right which is being "sold." The right to show a picture is of little account; value derives from the character and degree of exclusiveness with which the right is endowed. This is usually an affair of priority, length of run, period of clearance, and competitive area. And, since these privilege-making conditions have no common unit of measurement, a choice between bids will become largely an affair of someone's—presumably the seller's—unimpeded judgment. An escape from such caprice or favoritism can be effected only by a standardization of all the factors upon which the value of the franchise to show depends. Thus first, move-over, second, and other runs would have to be separately sold; the length of run and the period of clearance would have to be fixed; and the area within which no competitor would be permitted to put the picture on would have to be given precise boundaries.

Such a vast and intricate system of understandings and rules is utterly unsuited to judicial administration.

One example of the type of problem with which the court will be faced will suffice: An independent producer may have a picture of great drawing power. Under those circumstances advantage would lie rather in a longer run than a high percentage rental. In this view a bid for a one-month run at 25% is preferable to a bid for a one-week run at 40%, since the return would be much greater. Theatres owned by the defendants usually have adequate product and would be reluctant to agree to an extended showing while an independent exhibitor with inadequate product would be eager to have a long run. However, the independent producer is in most cases forced to release his product through a major distributor. It may be expected that the majors with their great number of theatres and their varying quality of product will arrange the bidding rules so that percentage rental shall be given greater weight than length of run in determining which is the highest bid. The probable result is that the independent producer will be required to lease his picture for the shorter period to a theatre owned by a major for one week rather than, as he desires, to an independent exhibitor who will give it a longer run. What answer a court will give to this problem which will be a legal and expedient solution is difficult to know.

Since it is the intention that defendant's methods of selling be uniform, a single body of trade practices will standardize the factors, fixing the character and degree of exclusiveness of the right which is licensed. The rules of the game will be drawn for the assumed protection of the independent by the very parties who have been found guilty of discriminating against the independent.

D. Bidding is Unworkable in the Motion Picture Industry.

In many areas of the economy a system of bidding is a factor of importance in maintaining a competitive market. The markets for corn, wheat, cotton, and other "staple" commodities present the neatest illustrations. There the article is constantly in trade. A common unit makes measurement and comparison an exercise in mathematics.

But the motion picture industry lies far removed from this area. What the exhibitors have to offer is playing time which like labor cannot be held back during the bargaining process. What the producer offers is public entertainment, the value of which depends upon the type of audience and the kind of distribution, something which must be planned in advance to secure the maximum public acceptance of the offering. It makes no financial difference to the seller of wheat who buys it. But the question of who first exhibits a motion picture may be of paramount importance. Each picture may loosely be called a separate commodity. But even separate feature pictures cannot be sold as commodities are sold.

The thing, then, that is bought and sold is not the product of studio and factory. It is instead such a fraction of all-the-rights to show the film as the conventions of the industry decree. There are no obvious or natural answers to such questions as the area within which the licensee of a particular picture is to be protected against competition, how long a period is to elapse before there is to be another showing in the neighborhood, what conditions must be satisfied to quality for first, second or third run. As the competitive area is enlarged and as the period of clearance is lengthened, the value of the license to show a feature picture is enhanced. As area contracts and time is shortened, the value of the license falls.

There can be under these conditions not even an approximate objective guide to sound business judgment in placing bids. The exhibitor is engaged in a continuous operation and must make secure his source of supplies for a whole season. Thus the price he can afford to pay for any picture depends upon the availability of other pictures he would like to show. If his business is to be kept going, he must find a substitute for the feature for which he strives and which he fails to get. No picture can be bought alone; his purchase is of a feature which has a distinctive place in a season's program.

A series of practical difficulties are certain to attend the operation of the system. An exhibitor, under the necessity of keeping his theatre going, is not going to limit himself to bidding for a single picture for a certain run. He will put in bids for a second, a third, or even a fourth choice, in case he is not successful on his first. There is likely to be a plague of overbidding with its attending confusions. If an exhibitor is successful in two or more bids, and can show only one picture, there must be a second contest or else a rule must specify who is to get the feature passed up. The handling of such difficulties will almost certainly result in the elaboration of a code. And the standards, procedures, rules making up the code are likely to prove so complicated as to overlay competitive bidding with a formal government of the industry.

It is, therefore, submitted that the conditions upon which the efficiency of competitive bidding is predicated do not exist in an industry so distinctive as motion-pictures. There is here no common unit by which product is to be made commensurable. The output of the studios cannot be classified even by type. Without a common unit, a standardized product, an access to information, a market into which transactions are merged, competitive bidding, we submit, is unworkable in the industry.

E. Auction Selling Will Create Substantial Unnecessary Difficulties in the Operation of the Exhibitor's Business.

If in fact auction bidding showed substantial promise of alleviating the monopoly conditions in the motion picture industry, there might well be justification for the unsettling of trade practices which have developed through the years. But since competitive bidding will serve no such beneficial purpose, the revolutionary changes which it will make in the business of exhibitors are further reasons why such a system should not be attempted. We shall briefly catalog such changes.

(a) At present most exhibitors have access to film and can schedule pictures sufficiently in advance to be assured that their theatre will be in continuous operation throughout the year. The new system will create uncertainty as to the availability of pictures. Independent exhibitors will be required to bid on every picture which is offered which they do not affirmatively feel would be unprofitable. They will have to bid for substantially more than they need because there is no assurance of what will be available to them. They will operate on a feast or famine system which in the case of independent exhibitors, as we have seen, will be more famine than feast. During the periods when they are unable to bid enough to obtain the pictures they desire they must close, show inferior product, or accept later or last run showings.

(b) At the present time the purchasing of film is time consuming but of manageable proportions. Under the proposed new system, judgments would have to be made as to each picture and separate bids made on those pictures.

It would require the hiring of additional personnel able to handle the great burden of administrative detail and judgment which can be expected to result from the bidding system. This might well be prohibitive when added to the higher cost of pictures under a competitive bidding system.

(c) Present trade practices are fairly well crystallized. Under the new system, hundreds and hundreds of disputes may be expected on the issues mentioned above, i.e., responsibility, competitive area, highest bid, proper size and equipment. This will be not only confusing but expensive.

(d) At present pictures whose value is in doubt often are sold without a fixed arrangement as to the lease rental. Others which make a disappointing showing result in an adjustment by agreement under which the distributor rebates part of the rental. Under the bidding system neither of these procedures would be possible because open pricing is specifically forbidden and adjustment might result in a final payment of rental less than the amount bid by the next highest bidder.

(e) The emphasis on price and the highest bidder will tend to concentrate desirable runs in the larger theatres with higher admission prices and shorter shows, thus decreasing the amount of entertainment which the consumer obtains for his dollar.

(f) Competitive bidding will impair the effectiveness of the exhibitor's function in the community. The exhibitor has the distinctive function of offering entertainment to the people of his area. It is his task to study, to cater to, and even to elevate the taste of his community. Such an endeavor cannot be realized by securing his pictures one by one through competitive bidding. Instead of a hand to mouth procedure, he must look ahead, select his offerings in terms of his distinctive needs and fit the items into a program. To neither exhibitor nor producer is the best bargain item by item as advantageous as playing for longtime and enduring gains. It is never good policy to make price alone the guide to business judgment. A good will, which requires a long-time vision, is to be built up. As the exhibitor must never forget his distinctive audience, so his interest commands that he should look ahead to make secure his source of supply. The motion picture exhibitor, in his concern for features, is not to be denied a precaution which is elementary to the automobile manufacturer in respect to steel and to the steel manufacturer in respect to coal and iron.

CONCLUSION.

The issue presented by this intervention is the effectiveness of the competitive bidding procedure for the objectives of the anti-trust laws and the evils found to exist by this Court. The evils found to exist are a combination by the defendants to exclude independent exhibitors from preferred runs to the advantage of their own controlled or affiliated theatres. To meet that situation the Court has devised an assumed remedy by competitive bidding. We have shown that the remedy will not be effective; that it will strengthen the defendants who are already strong and pit the weak independents against each other for the benefit of the defendants. It would give new and unprecedented powers to regulate the industry to the major defendants. Free of present restrictions due to business morality and immune from prosecution under the anti-trust laws, it creates a highway to greater concentration in monopoly and erects even greater barriers to the entry of independents into the business or to their progress to the place to which they are entitled in a free competitive society.

W. C. ALLRED; CHARLES E. BEACH and ELIZABETH L. BEACH, partners trading as BEACH AND BEACH, et al., Appellants, vs. THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, PARAMOUNT PICTURES INC., PARAMOUNT FILM DISTRIBUTING CORPORATION, et al.,	No. 1355

STATEMENT BY THE TWENTIETH CENTURY-FOX, LOEW, RKO, PARAMOUNT AND WARNER DEFENDANTS OF THEIR GROUNDS OF OPPOSITION TO THE JURISDICTION OF THE SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES OF THE APPEAL OF W. C. ALLRED, ET AL.

The Twentieth Century-Fox, Loew's, RKO, Paramount and Warner defendants-respondents move pursuant to the Rules of the Supreme Court of the United States for an order dismissing the attempted appeal of W. C. Allred et al. herein with costs. In support of such motion, these defendants present this counter statement as to the jurisdiction of this Court asserted by the appellants in their Statement of Jurisdiction filed and served February 26, 1947.

The attempted appeal is from an order denying the appellants leave to intervene in a suit brought by the United States against Paramount Pictures et al. to enjoin alleged violations of the anti-trust laws (15 U. S. C. Sections 1 et seq.). Intervention was not only opposed by the defendants, but also by the plaintiff upon the ground that the effect of making the appellants parties, as plaintiff's counsel stated, "* * * would simply be to hopelessly confuse the litigation without in any way aiding the solution that the Court has to arrive at".

1. THE JURISDICTIONAL STATEMENT DOES NOT SUSTAIN THE ATTEMPTED APPEAL.

This Court has consistently held that it lacks jurisdiction of an appeal from an order which does not possess the finality required by the statutes regulating its appellate jurisdiction.

Allen Co. v. Cash Register Co., 322 U. S. 137;
United States v. California Cooperative Canners, 279 U. S. 533, 556;
Arnold v. Guimarin & Co., 263 U. S. 427;
Collins v. Miller, 252 U. S. 364.

The statute relied upon by the appellants herein to sustain the appellate jurisdiction of the Supreme Court, namely, 15 U. S. C. Section 29, (32 Stat. 823), is not applicable to their appeal for the reason that the order sought to be appealed from is not a final decree as required by that statute.

Since it appears from the jurisdictional statement that the order in question is not a final decree, this Court should dismiss the appeal summarily for want of jurisdiction. In this very suit this Court has already dismissed a previous attempted appeal by several unsuccessful applicants for leave to intervene:

St. Louis Amusement Co. et al. v. United States, 326 U. S. 680.

In so doing, the court followed its established rule in such cases:

Allen Co. v. Cash Register Co., 322 U. S. 137;
Jewel Incandescent Lamp Co. Inc. v. General Electric Company, 318 U. S. 746;
Mississippi Central Railroad Co. v. Smith, 295 U. S. 718;
Hinderlider v. La Platta River & Cherry Creek Ditch Co., 291 U. S. 650.

The cases cited by the appellants do not support their contention that this Court has jurisdiction of their appeal. United States v. Terminal Railroad Association of St. Louis, 236 U. S. 194, did not concern an appeal from an order of the District Court denying leave to intervene, but was an original motion in the Supreme Court for leave to intervene. The appeal by the intervenors in the Terminal case appears sub nom Evans and Howard Fire Brick Co. v. United States, 236 U. S. 210. The questions of appealability and of jurisdiction were not raised and the order denying intervention was affirmed, since the relief that the intervenors sought had been accomplished by the Supreme Court decision in the main suit upon the appeal of the St. Louis Terminal Co. Missouri-Kansas Pipe Line Co. v. United States, 312 U. S. 502, does not support the contention of the appellants, since there the intervenor was named in the decree which expressly provided that if action were taken affecting the intervenor's rights it should be permitted to be heard, as Mr. Justice Roberts pointed out in Allen Co. v. Cash Register Co., 322 U. S. 137, at 141.

Neither United States v. Crescent Amusement Co., 323 U. S. 173, nor United States v. Bausch & Lomb Co., 321 U. S. 707, cited by appellants W. C. Allred, et al., as supporting their right to appeal have any application, since they did not involve motions for leave to intervene, but were simply ordinary cases under the Expediting Act where the parties to the actions appealed directly to the Supreme Court from final decrees entered by the District Court.

2. THE ORDER IS NOT APPEALABLE.

An order denying leave to intervene is not appealable, at least unless the applicant for intervention has a direct and immediate legal interest in a res which is the subject of the suit and which will be lost if intervention is denied.

United States v. California Cooperative Canners, 279 U. S. 553, 556;
Credits Commutation Co. v. U. S., 177 U. S. 131;
Ex-Parte Leaf Tobacco Board of Trade, 222 U. S. 578;
In re Englehard & Sons Co., 231 U. S. 646;
City of New York v. Consolidated Gas Co., 253 U. S. 219;
City of New York v. New York Telephone Co., 261 U. S. 312.

The appellants in this case, W. C. Allred, et al., have no such interest in the subject matter of the present suit.

Furthermore, in the case at bar, it is clear beyond question that the appellants do not have any legal interest in this litigation which is affected by the judgment herein. In other words, if one or more of the defendants had happened to distribute their motion pictures in the manner that is now required by the judgment, none of the appellants would have been possessed of the legal right to compel such defendants to sell in any other manner. The mere fact that the judgment directs the defendants to sell in this manner does not provide the appellants with any status to complain.

The order denying leave to intervene did not finally determine any right or claim which these appellants may possess. Their right, if any, to institute independent suits to enforce whatever rights they may possess is not affected by the order sought to be appealed from (15 U. S. C. Section 15).

3. APPELLANTS WERE NOT ENTITLED TO INTERVENE AS A MATTER OF RIGHT NOR AS A MATTER OF DISCRETION. REFUSAL OF LEAVE WAS CORRECT AND NOT AN ABUSE OF DISCRETION.

Appellants seeks to bring themselves within subdivision (2) of paragraph (a) of Rule 24, Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, which permits intervention of right "when the representation of the applicant's interests by existing parties is or may be inadequate and the applicant is or may be bound by a judgment in the action."

Under this rule both inadequacy of representation and the fact that the applicant will be bound by the judgment must appear. See MacDonald v. U. S., 119 F. (2d), 821, 827 (C. C. A. 9th, 1941), modified on other grounds, 315 U. S. 262.

Appellants are not "inadequately represented" within the meaning of Rule 24. Allen Co. v. Cash Register Co., 322 U. S. 137. That rule applies to representative action such as class actions, stockholders' derivative suits, etc. United States v. Columbia Gas & Electric Corporation, 27 F. Supp. 116; app. dism. 108 F. (2d), 614; cert. den. 309 U. S. 687; 2 Moore Federal Practice (1938 Sec. 24.07).

These appellants are therefore not entitled to intervene as a matter of right. Nor do they come within the provisions of the Rule permitting intervention as a matter of discretion.

Paragraph (b), Subdivision 2, of Rule 24 permits the District Court to allow intervention as a matter of discretion "when an applicant's claim or defense and the main action have a question of law or of fact in common." It further provides that "in exercising its discretion the Court shall consider whether the intervention will unduly delay or prejudice the adjudication of the rights of the original parties."

The appellants have no claim or defense having questions of law or fact in common with the main action. And it is apparent that to permit the intervention might unduly delay or prejudice the adjudication of the rights of the original parties. There was ample ground for the denial of intervention as a matter of discretion and the exercise of that discretion may not be reviewed in the absence of clear abuse.

Allen Co. v. Cash Register Co., 322 U. S. 137;
Credits Commutation Co. v. United States, 177 U. S. 311.

It is therefore respectfully submitted that this Court is without jurisdiction thereof and that this appeal should be dismissed summarily.

APPELLANTS' BRIEF

(Intervenors)

Grounds Upon Which Jurisdiction is Invoked.

This is an appeal from an order of the District Court for the Southern District of New York denying intervention to these appellants (hereinafter called Intervenors) and from the decree of that Court insofar as it directs the method by which feature films are to be marketed, generally referred to as "competitive bidding". A motion for leave to intervene in this Court is also now pending. The opinions of the Court below are reported in 66 F. Supp. 323 and 70 F. Supp. 53 and 76.

The jurisdiction of this Court is invoked pursuant to 15 U. S. C. A., Section 29, known as the Expediting Act, and reading as follows:

> In every suit in equity brought in any district court of the United States under sections 1-7 or 15 of this title, wherein the United States is complainant, an appeal from the final decree of the district court will lie only to the Supreme Court and must be taken within sixty days from the entry thereof. Feb. 11, 1903, c. 544, Sec. 2, 32 Stat. 823; Mar. 3, 1911, c. 231, Sec. 291, 36 Stat. 1167."

The decree was entered in an action brought by the United States under that section of the Act of July 2, 1890 commonly called the Sherman Antitrust Act which provides:

> Sec. 1. Trust, etc. in restraint of trade illegal; exception of resale price agreements; penalty
> "Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is hereby declared to be illegal: Provided, That nothing contained in sections 1-7 of this title shall render illegal, contracts or agreements prescribing minimum prices for the resale of a commodity which bears, or the label or container of which bears, the trade mark, brand, or name of the producer or distributor of such commodity and which is in free and open competition with commodities of the same general class produced or distributed by others, when contracts or agreements of that description are lawful; as applied to intrastate transactions, under any statute, law, or public policy now or hereafter in effect in any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia in which such resale is to be made, or to which the commodity is to be transported for such resale, and the making of such contracts or agreements shall not be an unfair method of competition under section 45, as amended and supplemented, of this title: Provided further, That the preceding proviso shall not make lawful any contract or agreement, providing for the establishment or maintenance of minimum resale prices on any commodity herein involved, between manufacturers, or between producers, or between wholesalers, or between brokers, or between factors, or between retailers, or between persons, firms, or corporations in competition with each other. Every person who shall make any contract or engage in any combination or conspiracy declared by sections 1-7 of this title to be illegal shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction thereof, shall be punished by fine not exceeding $5,000, or by imprisonment not exceeding one year, or by both said punishments, in the discretion of the court."

Sec. 2. Monopolizing trade a misdemeanor; penalty

"Every person who shall monopolize or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction thereof, shall be punished by fine not exceeding $5,000, or by imprisonment not exceeding one year, or by both said punishments, in the discretion of the court."

The motion for leave to intervene in the District Court was brought under Rule 24 (a) and (b) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, 28 U. S. C. following Section 723 (c). Federal Rule 24 (a) and (b) reads as follows:

> "(a) Intervention of right. Upon timely application anyone shall be permitted to intervene in an action: (1) when a statute of the United States confers an unconditional right to intervene; or (2) when the representation of the applicant's interest by existing parties is or may be inadequate and the applicant is or may be bound by a judgment in the action; or (3) when the applicant is so situated as to be adversely affected by a distribution or other disposition of property in the custody of the court or of an officer thereof."
> "(b) Permissive intervention. Upon timely application anyone may be permitted to intervene in an action: (1) when a statute of the United States confers a conditional right to intervene; or (2) when an applicant's claim or defense and the main action have a question of law or fact in common. In exercising its discretion the court shall consider whether the intervention will unduly delay or prejudice the adjudication of the rights of the original parties."

Cases supporting Intervenors' rights to appeal to this Court from the order denying their motion to intervene are as follows:

Missouri-Kansas Pipe Line Co. v. U. S., 312 U. S. 502;

U. S. v. Terminal Railroad Ass'n of St. Louis, 236 U. S. 194;

Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen v. Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Company, 91 L. E. 1301. Decided June 9, 1947;

Wolpe v. Poretsky, 144 F. (2d) 505.

Cases supporting Intervenors' right to appeal to this Court from the final decree of December 31, 1946 are as follows:

U. S. v. Terminal Railroad Ass'n of St. Louis, 236 U. S. 194;

U. S. v. Crescent Amusement Co., 323 U. S. 173;

U. S. v. Bausch & Lomb Co., 321 U. S. 707.

The jurisdiction of the Court to consider and pass upon the motion to intervene in this appeal is based on Rule 24 (a) of the Rules of Civil Procedure as above set forth, the inherent power of the Court and the precedent of United States v. Terminal Railroad Association of St. Louis, supra.

Orders of this Court were entered June 23, 1947 stating that the jurisdiction of the Court to consider this appeal and consideration of the motion to intervene were postponed to the hearing of the cases on the merits.

Statement of the Case.

This statement is confined to matters material to the consideration of the questions presented by the appeal of these Intervenors.

The action was instituted by the United States pursuant to the Sherman Antitrust Act charging defendants with combining and conspiring to restrain and monopolize interstate trade in the production, distribution and exhibition of motion pictures. Intervenors are independent exhibitors of motion pictures or representatives of operators of over 2000 theatres in some twelve different states of the Union cooperating for their mutual benefit as a nonprofit association known as The Confederacy of Southern Associations. They have been accustomed to rent (license) motion picture films for exhibition in their theatres through defendants, who distribute about 80% of the available supply of feature pictures in this country. No exhibitor can successfully operate without access to their production. Goldman Theatres, Inc. v. Loew's, Inc., 150 F. (2d) 738, 744-5. (Also R., p. 3517.)

On June 11, 1946 the Court rendered its opinion finding plaintiff's charges to be true in a number of respects (R., pp. 3504-3563). The opinion directed the entry of a decree carrying out its findings and, among other things, directed that such decree should provide as follows (R., pp. 3560-3561):

> "No defendant or its subsidiaries shall exhibit its films other than on its own behalf or through wholly owned subsidiaries, or subsidiaries in which it has an interest of at least ninety-five per cent, without offering the license at a minimum price for any run desired by the operators of each theatre within the competitive area. The license desired shall in such case be granted to the highest responsible bidder having a theatre of a size and equipment adequate to show the picture upon the terms offered. The license shall be granted solely upon the merits and without discrimination in favor of affiliates, old customers, or any person whatever. Each license shall be offered and taken theatre by theatre and picture by picture. No contracts for exhibition shall be entered into, or if already outstanding shall be performed, in which the license to exhibit one feature is conditioned upon an agreement of the licensee to take a license of one or more other features, but licenses to exhibit more than one feature may be included in a single instrument provided the licensee shall have had the opportunity to bid for each feature separately and shall have made the best bid for each picture so included."

Such a method of marketing had not been suggested by the parties or discussed in their briefs (see plaintiff's Statement as to Jurisdiction, p. 14) and had only been mentioned casually during the trial by counsel (R., pp. 2304, 2618, 2747-49) and in the testimony of witnesses (R., pp. 737-8, 1363, 1394-5). No witness favored it.

As promptly as possible after being advised of the opinion of the Court, Intervenors caused to be prepared and filed a petition to intervene (R., pp. 3578-96) for the purpose of eliminating from the decree the provisions above quoted. This petition, in addition to the allegations of inadequacy of representation, timeliness of application and the binding effect of the judgment, set forth in detail the various characteristics of the exhibitor Intervenors, the conditions necessary for profitable operation of their theatres, conditions material in the procurement of licenses, advantages of the present system of licensing, rental value considerations and necessity of adjustments after exhibition, methods of booking and the disastrous results to Intervenors and their property interests, of the selling system directed by the opinion, to all of which this Court is respectfuly referred.

No allegation of fact in the petition to intervene was controverted by any of the parties. The Intervenors' motion to intervene was argued by counsel and leave to file a brief in support of their contentions was granted. Other exhibitors and exhibitor associations made the same or like objections to the quoted provisions of the opinion so that, among the exhibitors of the nation operating some 15,000 theatres, there was substantial unanimity of opposition to any form of the decreed auction selling or competitive bidding.

On December 31, 1946, the Court made and filed its findings of fact and conclusions of law and its decree (70 F. Supp. 53). Concurrently with the filing of the findings and decree, the Court filed a supplementary memorandum opinion (R., p. 3702, 70 F. Supp. 76). On January 21, 1947 the Court made its order denying the motion to intervene (R., p. 3718). In the decree of December 31, 1946 the Court decreed as follows (R., pp. 3695, 3696-7, 3700-1):

II.

"Each of the defendant distributors, Paramount Pictures, Inc.; Paramount Film Distributing Corporation; Loews, Incorporated; Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation; RKO Radio Pictures, Inc.; Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc.; Warner Bros. Pictures Distributing Corporation [formerly known as Vitagraph, Inc.]; Twentieth-Century Fox Film Corporation; Columbia Pictures Corporation; Columbia Pictures of Louisiana, Inc.; Universal Corporation; Universal Film Exchanges, Inc.; Big U Film Exchange, Inc.; and United Artists Corporation; and the successors of each of them, and any and all individuals who act in behalf of any thereof with respect to the matters enjoined, and each corporation in which said defendants or any of them own a direct or indirect stock interest of more than fifty per cent, is hereby enjoined:

• • • • • • • • • • •

8. From licensing in the future any feature for exhibition in any theatre, not its own, in any manner except the following:

(a) A license to exhibit each feature released for public exhibition in any competitive area shall be offered to the operator of each theatre in such area who desires to exhibit it on some run [other than that upon which such feature is to be exhibited in the theatre of the licensor] selected by such operator, and upon uniform terms;

(b) Each license shall be granted solely upon the merits and without discrimination in favor of affiliates, old customers or others;

(c) Where a run is desired, or is to be offered, upon terms which exclude simultaneous exhibition in competing theatres, the distributor shall notify, not less than thirty days in advance of the date when bids will be received, all exhibitors in the competitive area, offering to license the features upon one or more runs, and in such offer shall state the amount of a flat rental as the minimum for such license for a specified number of days of exhibition, the time when the exhibition is to commence and the availability and clearance, if any, which will be granted for each such run. Within fifteen days after receiving such notice, any exhibitor in such competitive area may bid for such license, and in his bid shall state what run such exhibitor desires and what he is willing to pay for such feature, which statement may specify a flat rental, or a percentage of gross receipts, or both, or any other form of rental, and shall also specify what clearance such exhibitor is willing to accept, the time and days when such exhibitor desires to exhibit it, and any other offers which such exhibitor may care to make. The distributor may reject all offers made for any such feature, but in the event of the acceptance of any, the distributor shall grant such license upon the run bid for to the highest responsible bidder, having a theatre of a size, location and equipment adequate to yield a reasonable return to the licensor. The method of licensing specified in this subdivision shall not be required in areas where there is no competition among theatres or in run, or in which there is no offer made by any exhibitor within the time above mentioned. The words "exclude simultaneous exhibition" shall be held to mean the exhibition of a specified run in one theatre with clearance over other theatres in the competitive area. The words "competitive area" shall refer to the territory occupied by more than one theatre in which it may fairly and reasonably be said that such theatres compete with each other for the exhibition of features on any run.

(e) A theatre is not a defendant's own theatre unless it owns therein a legal or equitable interest of ninety-five per cent or more, either directly or through affiliates or subsidiaries.

9. From arbitrarily refusing the demand of an exhibitor, who operates a theatre in competition with another theatre not owned or operated by a defendant distributor, or its affiliate or subsidiary, made by registered mail, addressed to the home office of the distributor, to license a feature to him for exhibition on a run selected by the exhibitor, instead of licensing it to another exhibitor for exhibition in his competing theatre on such run. Such demand shall be deemed to have been refused either upon the receipt by the exhibitor of a refusal in writing or upon the expiration of ten days after the receipt of the exhibitor's demand.

VI.

For the purpose of securing compliance with this Decree, and for no other purpose, duly authorized representatives of the Department of Justice shall, on written request of the Attorney General or the Assistant Attorney General in charge of antitrust matters, and on notice to any defendant, reasonable as to time and subject matter, made to such defendant as its principal office, and subject to any legally recognized privilege, (1) be permitted reasonable access, during the office hours of such defendant, to all books, ledgers, accounts, correspondence, memoranda and other records and documents in the possession or under the control of such defendant, relating to any of the matters contained in this Decree, and that during the times that the plaintiff shall desire such access, counsel for such defendant may be present, and (2) subject to the reasonable convenience of such defendant, and without restraint or interference from it, be permitted to interview its officers or employees regarding any such matters, at which interview counsel for the officer or employee interviewed and counsel for such defendant company may be present.

Information obtained pursuant to the provisions of this section shall not be divulged by any representative of the Department of Justice to any person other than a duly authorized representative of the Department of Justice, except in the course of legal proceedings to which the United States is a party, or as otherwise required by law.

VIII.

Jurisdiction of this cause is retained for the purpose of enabling any of the parties to the judgment and no others, to apply to the court at any time for such orders or direction as may be necessary or appropriate for the construction, modification, or carrying out of the same, for the enforcement of compliance therewith, and for the punishment of violations thereof, or for other or further relief."

While the provisions of the decree somewhat modified the competitive bidding procedure outlined in the opinion, Intervenors still believe they and their property interests will suffer irreparable damage if the decree stands as written, and, accordingly, have appealed from the order denying intervention and from the provisions of the decree directing competitive bidding. The defendant Paramount and the non-exhibitor defendants, Columbia, Universal and United Artists, have also appealed from the competitive bidding provisions of the decree (R., pp. 3745-6, 3760-1, 3797, 3783-4). Plaintiff has assigned error (R., pp. 3722-3) on the ground that the competitive bidding decreed would not be effective to eliminate unreasonable discrimination.

By order of this Court dated June 23, 1947 consideration of the appeal and of the motion to intervene was postponed until the hearing on the merits.

Specification of Assigned Errors Relied Upon.

1. The United States District Court for the Southern District of New York erred in refusing to grant Intervenors' application to intervene as of right in the above-entitled action.

2. The said Court erred in making the order, entered January 23, 1947, denying Intervenors' application to intervene.

3. The said Court erred in holding (if so held) that its judgment of December 31, 1946 is not binding on these Intervenors.

4. Said Court erred in holding (if so held) that representation of Intervenors' interests was adequate.

5. Said Court erred in holding (if so held) that Intervenors' application was not timely.

6. The said Court erred in including in its final decree entered December 31, 1946 and more particularly in Section II thereof, the portions of paragraph 8 quoted above (pp. 8-10).

7. The said Court erred in holding that it was empowered and authorized under the provisions of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act to include in its decree the above quoted paragraphs.

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT.

I. Intervenors should have been permitted to intervene in the District Court and should now be permitted to intervene in this Court for the following reasons:

A.

They are bound by the Decree.

Due to the perishable character of the product dealt with and its limited useful life to the buyer-exhibitor; the necessity for a supply assuring continuous operation; the large number of features required each year; the necessity of offering the public a variety of attractions as well as the many other complexities of the exhibition business, the competitive bidding provisions of the decree can only bring about hopeless chaos in the business of the exhibitors. They will be irreparably damaged and they have no remedy except through intervention in this case. Under the authorities this is sufficient to make the decree binding upon them under the provisions of Rule 24 (a).

B.

The representation of Intervenors' interests was and continues to be inadequate.

An examination of the record shows that the interests of the independent exhibitor were completely disregarded. Counsel for the Government, who would naturally be expected to protect the independent exhibitor's interests, concentrated his efforts, and still concentrates his efforts, in seeking to bring about divestiture of the theatres of the major defendants. His objections to the competitive bidding features of the decree are based only on his contention that these provisions are not an adequate substitute for divestiture. The three "minor" defendants who now attack competitive bidding make their attack from the point of view of their own interests, which are in many respects diametrically opposed to those of the independent exhibitor.

C.

The application to intervene was timely made.

This has been in effect conceded by the Court below and counsel.

D.

The motion to intervene in this Court should be granted.

The authorities sustain the right to intervene directly in an appeal to this Court and the same should be allowed for the same reasons that it should have been allowed by the District Court as above set forth.

II. The dissolution and trade practice reliefs other than the competitive bidding requirement will terminate the restraints found to be unlawful.

An analysis of the various trade practices which the District Court found were used in restraint of trade and of the effect thereon of the provisions of the decree other than the provisions of Section II, paragraph 8, shows that the latter provisions are unnecessary to effect the purposes of the decree. The other injunctive provisions coupled with the visitorial power of the Attorney General and the reservation of jurisdiction is adequate.

III. The directions as to competitive bidding are not authorized under the Sherman Act but are directly contrary to the spirit of the Act.

It is conceded, as it must be, that the District Court has reasonable discretion in molding a decree so as to make it completely effective in eliminating abuses found to exist. Its discretion does not, however, extend to the inclusion of provisions, unnecessarily destructive of the property and interests of innocent parties. Certainly a decree directing the inauguration of a system which, as here, brings about a restraint of trade for the benefit of those against whom relief is sought, cannot be justified.

Conclusion.

For the reasons above stated, intervention should be allowed and the competitive bidding provisions of the decree should be eliminated.

THE ARGUMENT.

POINT I.

Intervenors should have been permitted to intervene in the District Court and should now be permitted to intervene in this Court.

As long as Intervenors are permitted to intervene it is of no moment whether intervention is based upon the original motion in the statutory court or on the motion filed in this Court. While Rule 24 (a) of the Rules of Civil Procedure is specifically restricted to the District Courts, since there is no rule in this Court dealing with intervention it is submitted that the spirit and intent of Rule 24 (a) should be applied in determining whether persons whose rights are vitally affected should be heard.

All the requirements for intervention as of right under Rule 24 (a) were satisfied, namely, (a) the Intervenors are bound by the judgment in the action, (b) the representation of Intervenors' interests by existing parties was and continues to be inadequate, and (c) the motion was timely made.

A.

(1) Nature of Business.

The Court has postponed consideration of this appeal and of the pending motion to intervene until the hearing on the merits. We understand that if it be shown that the decree has an adverse effect on the applicant and the practical necessities grant him a right to intervene, the order denying the intervention is appealable. (Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen v. Baltimore & Ohio, 91 L. E. 1301.) The adverse effect and the practical necessities can only be tested by a consideration of the nature of the business and the impact upon it of the decretal provisions complained of.

Over a period of years experience has established certain trade practices growing out of the specialized nature of the business of motion picture exhibition and by reason of the perishable character of the product which has a very limited useful life to the individual buyer-exhibitor. For this reason considerations which justified decrees fixing sales methods in cases of heavy equipment as in the International Salt, 16 Law Week 4005, November 10, 1947; Hartford-Empire, 323 U. S. 386 and Pullman Company, 64 F. Supp. 108 cases are not applicable.

First, it is absolutely essential that the purchaser (exhibitor) shall be assured of a supply of features sufficient to maintain continuous operations. The exhibitor must look to the defendants for this continuous supply of features as the defendants control 80% of the pictures. Goldman Theatres, Inc. v. Loew's Inc., supra. If a picture is changed once a week, the exhibitor must license 52 pictures in a year, and if twice a week, 104 pictures. These figures are doubled if double (two) features are shown at each performance.

A second consideration is the location and suitability of the theatre; the reputation the theatre enjoys in the community for showing a certain type of picture or the features of a certain producer; the efficiency of the management; and all the other factors that enter into the success of any commercial enterprise.

A third consideration relates to the variety of attractions offered. At present, a first run theatre is allowed to exhibit all of the features of one or more distributors which it desires to exhibit. The theatre can offer its patrons assorted and balanced programs at a uniform price, although some features cost millions to produce and other pictures cost a lesser amount. An exhibitor who showed nothing but animal pictures week after week would be obliged soon to close his doors. He must ever be careful in the selection of the star performers because their popularity varies with localities.

Upon obtaining a license to exhibit a film only the first and in many respects the least important step had been taken. The second step and the one necessary to take care of the above requirement is the "booking". For details of this operation and the highly specialized duties of a "booker" we respectfully refer to pages 3588-90 of the Record.

Another pre-exhibition step is the publicity in which the exhibitor and distributor ordinarily join forces.

Some idea may be gained of the complexity of the operation by examination of a typical contract annexed hereto Exhibit F-10 (Adm. R., p. 1067).

The final important feature of the business vital to anyone engaged therein is that it is, to use a colloquial term, a "show" business. The mysterious, unpredictable but all-governing factor is the public taste. Over the years distributors and exhibitors have come to recognize the element of probable error in fixing by the bargaining process the compensation to be paid for exhibiting a film and a universal trade practice has become effective under which, if a film failed to meet expectations, an equitable adjustment is made in favor of the exhibitor. These adjustments are justified from the interest of the distributor because they have maintained his outlets and induced the exhibitor to accept and show films of uncertain appeal with a reasonable assurance of protection against loss and complete assurance of receiving the better films.

As a result, under the existing method of licensing films, an exhibitor has been enabled to have available for exhibition in his theatre or theatres all of the pictures distributed by one or more of the defendants over a period of years, either under agreements made annually, or under agreements made with respect to individual pictures or with respect to small blocks of pictures.

The essential requisites from an exhibitor's standpoint of this established method of buying and selling (licensing) features will be done away with if the competitive bidding provisions of the decree are permitted to stand, with disastrous results to Intervenors and their property interests. In order to demonstrate the truth of this statement it is necessary first to analyze the provisions of the decree and then apply these provisions to the exhibition business.

(2) Analysis of Competitive Bidding Provisions of Decree.

In the memorandum (R., p. 3702) handed down simultaneously with the decree the Court said:

> "In order to meet some of the objections raised at the hearing to the system of bidding for features described in the opinion of the court, we have modified the system there proposed so that competitive bidding will only be necessary within a competitive area and in such an area where it is desired by the exhibitors. In other words, the decree provides an opportunity to bid for any exhibitor in a competitive area who may desire to do so."

The opinion of June, 1946 extended auction selling to all pictures, features, news reels and shorts. The final decree limits competitive bidding to feature films (films in excess of 4000 feet in length) and to competitive areas, defining such an area as "the territory occupied by more than one theatre in which it may fairly and reasonably be said that such theatres compete with each other for the exhibition of pictures on any run" (R., pp. 3697-8).

The very definition of a "competitive area" is pregnant with litigation. Who is going to decide when two theatres are in a competitive area and the competitive bidding provisions of the decree become effective; the producer or the exhibitor? By what yardsticks will this decision be reached? If an agreement cannot be reached, inevitably the courts will have to decide the issue. This definition is so broad that its application may result in the elimination of all clearances, despite the fact that reasonable clearance is necessary for the successful operation of a theatre and was so found by the Court in the June, 1946 opinion (R., pp. 3530-1). Suppose theatre A competes with theatre B, and theatre C competes with theatre B but not theatre A—B must bid against both A and C but A need bid only against B. Any number of additional theatres and overlapping areas of competition could be included in this example but the simple illustration given makes clear the unfairness to exhibitors of the requirement of competitive bidding.

Assuming that a competitive area has been established, the decree would seem to provide for two methods of licensing features.

The first method is found in sub-paragraph (a) of paragraph 8, Section II, where the distributor is directed to offer the feature available for exhibition to every exhibitor who desires to exhibit the feature on some run selected by the exhibitor and upon uniform terms. The run selected must be different from the run in the distributor's own theatre, if any; meaning no doubt subsequent to the exhibition in the producer's theatre because under the decree the producer is given the right to show his own pictures in his own theatres. How the exhibitor makes known his desire to exhibit a feature or when the distributor makes his offer after receiving notice of an exhibitor's desire to show a feature and what happens after the exhibitors receive and reject an offer were left by the Court in a realm of conjecture and future court regulation. In any event, the practical application of this method would appear to be extremely limited.

It is when one undertakes to apply the second method which is prescribed in sub-paragraph (c) that the impracticability and harmful effects of competitive bidding more clearly appear. In considering this provision of the decree it must be borne in mind throughout that the independent exhibitor in an area where he competes with a producer-owned (major defendant) theatre (and this includes every major city and town), starts off under a most serious handicap because the producer-owned theatre is assured of months of features each year without bidding for them, and then is free to bid against the independent for all other available features in accordance with the prescribed method.

Sub-paragraph (c) invokes a complicated and confused system of offers and counter offers on an impracticable time schedule and then directs the distributor to accept the offer made by the "highest responsible bidder, having a theatre of a size, location and equipment adequate to yield a reasonable return to the distributor". This sub-paragraph requires the distributor, unless the feature is to be run simultaneously in competing theatres in an area (an unheard of practice), to notify the exhibitors that the feature is available for license, and specifies the time in which bids shall be made by the exhibitors. Each exhibitor for his own protection must bid, as he cannot know that his competitor is not making a bid. The practical effect of this provision of the decree is to remove any optional feature which the Court may have intended. Since the decree requires that an offer must state (a) the run desired, (b) the amount the exhibitor is willing to pay either as a flat rental or on a percentage basis, or both or in any other form, (c) the clearance desired, (d) the time and days for exhibition and (e) any other "offers", by which the Court may have meant any other terms or even several offers, an equitable application of the yardstick quoted above is impossible. The obvious result will be that the producer can pick at will the offer he wants to accept without fear that a disgruntled exhibitor can successfully seek court relief on the ground that his offer should have been accepted, because there are too many variables for even a court to formulate and apply a workable yardstick for the purpose of making such determination.

In addition to the items which the Court requires shall be stated in each offer, there are many other items which also must be stated in order that there may be a meeting of minds. See Exhibit F-10 hereto annexed. Competitive bidding is clearly futile and the complications of such a system defeat its own end.

(3) Disastrous Results to Independent Exhibitors.

Other obvious disastrous results which will flow from the decreed competitive bidding are explained in detail in the motion to intervene in the District Court (R., p. 3578 ff.) and are summarized as follows:

1. The District Court specified in paragraph 8 that "each license shall be granted solely upon the merits and without discrimination in favor of affiliates, old customers or others", destroying thereby the recognized policy in all industry founded upon years of experience that for business, moral, social and other reasons, where one outlet for a product has proved satisfactory, it should not be changed merely because someone else may temporarily offer a better price or promise other advantages. The Court, by this direction, has said that a distributor must not lean towards an old and satisfactory customer, who knows better how to market a picture, who is known to be honest in his dealings, who has built up a reputation for showing the distributor's pictures in his theatre over a period of years, who has become a prominent and valued citizen and who possesses other desirable attributes.

2. The larger theatres, with the larger resources, many of which are owned or operated by distributor-defendants, in the long run will be able to outbid independents operating smaller theatres having smaller resources, and so will obtain the bulk of the most desirable product. The smaller theatres will become mediocre theatres, exhibiting only features on a second and subsequent run basis, or cheaper and poorer features on a first run basis. Eventually they may be forced to close or sell out to competitors, thus fostering and encouraging monopolistic practices. Nor may this economic disparity be adjusted by Court decree. Bigelow v. R K O Radio Pictures, 162 F. (2d) 520, 522, certiorari denied November 10, 1947; 16 Law Week 3150.

3. The decreed method of licensing will increase admission prices to the detriment of the public and the exhibitor through the increase in film rentals due to (a) the increased cost of distribution, and (b) the inevitable result that exhibitors, in order to secure feature films, will bid more for them than they now pay through the existing system of negotiated licenses. It is simply a Court protected license to the producer to exact the highest possible price for his features from exhibitors.

4. The decreed method forbids and prevents the necessary post-exhibition adjustments, an accepted trade practice, by means of which film rentals are equitably adjusted in keeping with the results of exhibition, and proper allowances are made for errors in evaluation and for conditions affecting exhibition beyond the control of exhibitors and distributors.

5. Material loss will result to Intervenors under the proposed system, because of the uncertainty as to the result of bids for features, the delay in arranging programs, and the fact that an exhibitor may bid for too few or too many features, not knowing how many of his bids will be successful.

6. The provisions of sub-paragraph (c) of Paragraph 8 are impracticable as to the timing of bids and acceptances and the basis on which bids are to be submitted, and the respective rights of distributors and exhibitors thereunder are uncertain.

7. An independent exhibitor-owner or operator of two theatres equal in seating capacity to one larger theatre of a defendant or another exhibitor cannot successfully bid against such defendant, since the decree provides that each license must be offered and taken theatre by theatre and picture by picture.

(4) The Authorities Support This Position.

We have discussed above the factual situation and have demonstrated the damage which will be suffered by Intervenors and their property interests if the provisions complained of are included in the decree. We now discuss the legal principles applicable to these facts.

Judgment in the sense it is used in Rule 24, does not mean an actual judgment against Intervenors. It is enough that from a practical standpoint the effect of the judgment will be binding upon and prejudicial to Intervenors, and that they cannot secure relief to which they are entitled through other means. This was recognized by the District Court in its opinion (R., pp. 3541-2) when it is said:

> "While our decision will not be res adjudicata as to those not parties to the litigation, the parties are necessarily and properly bound, and indeed the decision is a judicial precedent against the others on the questions of law involved in those situations we have referred to where they have unreasonably restrained trade and commerce."

We have shown that Intervenors cannot conduct their business without the product of one or more of the defendants. Intervenors by reason of the decree will be compelled to submit to the market regulations imposed by the uniform action required of the defendants who control the supply of feature pictures. The decree deprives Intervenors of their present right to enjoin a combination controlling the market for feature film; they will be unable to sue for damages on account of injury caused them by the Court directed plan of competitive bidding.

It can scarcely be argued that this will not be the effect of the decree, because any independent action taken by Intervenors will be met by the defense that the defendants are acting in accordance with the directions of the District Court. It should be noted that the rule not only covers cases where the Intervenors are bound as a matter of law, but also cases where they "may be bound". The Court retains jurisdiction for the purpose of further regulation of the business, should that be necessary. Intervenors will unavoidably have a direct interest in that further regulation from which the District Court has excluded them.

Nor is it necessary that Intervenors have a direct and immediate interest in the res. In a technical sense, there is no res in any anti-trust action. If interest in a res were necessary, there could never be intervention in an anti-trust suit. While such an interest is required under Rule 24 (a) (3), it is not required where intervention is sought as here under Rule 24 (a) (2). Such a requirement is contrary to the holdings of this Court in Missouri-Kansas Pipe Line Co. v. U. S., supra and U. S. v. Terminal R. R. Assoc. of St. Louis, supra.

This later case involved an appeal from the District Court from a denial of an application for leave to intervene made by persons and corporations conducting businesses along the lines of the Terminal R. R. Company. The effect of the decree was to enjoin the Terminal R. R. Company from conducting its transportation business in a manner which would permit it to serve the business of the Intervenors. The petition was denied on jurisdictional grounds, and there was a further appeal to the Supreme Court. Certain of those who had sought to intervene in the lower Court petitioned to intervene in the Supreme Court, seeking the same relief. The Government challenged their right. The Court stated at page 199:

> "The challenge by the United States of the right to hear the intervening petitioners is without merit, since even, although the petitioners were not parties, > they are entitled to be originally heard concerning the settlement of the decree insofar as it might operate prejudicially to their rights."

As stated above, the effect of the decreed competitive bidding will be to endanger the entire business of Intervenors in that their access to the feature film market is limited by a system imposed upon them which destroys all established relationships on which Intervenors now depend for their pictures, and only benefits the major distributors (defendants). All competition between sellers is eliminated. No reviewable criteria are possible by which the bidder can be selected. The choice must, therefore, lie entirely within the uncontrolled business judgment of the producer-distributors (defendants) who have already been held guilty of discrimination in violation of the Sherman Act.

Inevitably and inescapably Intervenors are bound by the decree.

B.

The representation of Intervenors' interests by existing parties was and continues to be inadequate.

We have already shown (pp. 6-7) that no party sought competitive bidding, and that the few expert witnesses who were questioned in regard to a system of auction selling were unanimous in stating that such a system will be harmful to producers, distributors and exhibitors alike. The position of the plaintiff-Government in the proceedings in the District Court appears in the following statement of counsel (R., p. 2800):

> " • • • I do not think with all due respect that the Court in the time that it has to study the indus> try, is in a position to evolve for the defendants any new system as such to replace an existing system. We find that we get into trouble and we lead the courts into trouble when we try to do that."

And in the following quotation from the plaintiff's brief below:

> "Until the Court has decided that question and determined the general form that the dissolution of these combinations is to take, we do not believe that any final form of trade practice relief against all of the distributor defendants may be satisfactorily determined."

And in the final argument of Government's counsel (R., p. 2878):

> "Therefore it seems to us that the choice now before the Court, assuming that divorcement is unacceptable, is between the restricted system of competitive disposition of exclusive runs, including the ban on cross-licensing offered by the Government, or no so-called auction selling or competitive bidding system at all, unless the Court is prepared to adopt a system of selling films which only the major defendants desire."

Plaintiff now takes the position (R., p. 3722, assignment of error 10) that competitive bidding will not introduce competition into the present system of licensing pictures and that the Court erred in concluding (R., p. 3723, assignment of error 18) that competitive bidding will "make it impossible for the defendants to discriminate unreasonably in favor of circuit theatres and against the independents." The Government's assignment of error number 10 is in effect substantially the same as number 18. These assignments of error must be read in the light of the statements quoted above and of assignment number 25 (R., p. 3723)—that the Court erred in failing to decree divestiture.

cess to all books and papers of the defendants and the right to interview their officers or employees in order to secure compliance therewith. It has also by Section II, paragraph 9, of the decree enjoined defendants from an arbitrary refusal to grant an exhibitor a license to exhibit a feature on a run selected by him instead of granting such license to a competitor.

The Court says of the present system (unaffected by its correctives) that "the only way competition may be introduced into" it is by the directed competitive bidding plan (R., p. 3540). But it is submitted that the dissolution and trade practice reliefs proposed by the Court, other than the competitive bidding requirement, plainly will effect an alteration of "the present system", adequate to terminate any unlawful restraint of commerce by the defendants. This is demonstrated by a consideration of the several practices found to be illegal and which the Court seeks to remedy through competitive bidding, and of the effect of the other provisions of the decree upon the same.

Minimum admission prices, clearances and runs.

The charge in this respect by the Government was that these practices in the business of exhibiting motion pictures were controlled by a concert of the defendants. No discrimination was found. The injunctive relief directed as to clearances and runs simply relates to concerted action. Concerted action obviously could continue even under competitive bidding system, and it is difficult to see how any more can be done than to issue the injunction and leave any correction that may be required to the Attorney General under his visitorial powers, and to the legal remedies of any person injured.

As to minimum prices for admission, although the charge is only against the concerted fixing of the same, the decree does not limit the injunction simply to concerted action. However, the fixing of such minimum prices would necessarily be a matter of contract, and ample protection is afforded through the fact that such contracts are at all times open to inspection. The Court itself has partially recognized this in its Opinion (R., pp. 3529-30) by saying that the elimination of the fixing by distributors of admission prices will create an opportunity for exhibitors to compete as to admission prices, and may well benefit both exhibitors and the public.

Formula deals, master contracts and franchises.

These, again, are all matters of contract and have been forbidden. The injunction in these respects is practically self-executing, and is sufficiently implemented by the interest of the independent and his reliance on the substantial body of case law which would permit him not only to institute contempt proceedings in this Court, but also to institute treble damage suits against any distributor violating the injunction.

Move-overs, extended and repeated runs.

Any breach of the injunctions against these practices would be so overt as to make such a breach practically impossible.

Block booking.

In this case, written contracts would, again, govern the situation, and any contract which sought to tie in the purchase of one license with the purchase of another would be illegal and unenforceable. The visitorial power of the Attorney General would operate as well as the remedies open to the exhibitor.

In all of the above instances, the decree of the Court could be substantially carried out without competitive bidding, and would permit a system of private negotiation between supplier and customer, a system which has been approved in almost innumerable cases and is expressly protected by Congress in the Robinson-Patman Act. See Federal Trade Commission v. Raymond Co., 263 U. S. 565, 573; Perkins v. Lukens Steel Co., 310 U. S. 113, 127. Any exhibitor believing he was being discriminated against could avail himself of paragraph 9.

If time shall prove these expectations to have been ill-founded, then, the Court having reserved jurisdiction, additional remedies may be considered and invoked in the future.

POINT III.

The directions as to competitive bidding are not authorized under the Sherman Act but are directly contrary to the spirit of the Act.

While the wording of the decree is in the reasonable discretion of the District Court, it is felt that if the Statutory Court had been furnished with sufficient information as to the inevitable effects of competitive bidding on independent exhibitors, it would not have directed that this trade practice be made compulsory. But having fathered it, there was nothing the court could do except to try to eliminate some of its obvious difficulties and still retain the plan.

Section 4 of the Sherman Act, 15 U. S. C. A. § 4, invests the district courts with jurisdiction to "prevent and re- strain" violations of the Act. Injunctive action is specifically authorized. In order to make the restraints effective, the Courts have held that positive directions are authorized to the end that the means used to effect the illegal acts be destroyed. Thus, in Standard Oil Co. v. U. S., 221 U. S. 1, the Supreme Court held valid the decree dissolving the combination, pointing out, however, that "one of the fundamental purposes of the statute is to protect, not to destroy, rights of property". The decree should not be needlessly destructive. Federal Trade Commission v. Royal Milling Co., 288 U. S. 219; Jacob Siegel v. Federal Trade Commission, 327 U. S. 608.

In United States v. American Tobacco Co., 221 U. S. 106, 185, the Court stated:

> "In considering the subject from both of these aspects three dominant influences must guide our action: 1. The duty of giving complete and efficacious effect to the prohibitions of the statute; 2, the accomplishing of this result with as little injury as possible to the interest of the general public; and, 3, a proper regard for the vast interests of private property which may have become vested in many persons as a result of the acquisition either by way of stock ownership or otherwise of interests in the stock or securities of the combination without any guilty knowledge or intent in any way to become actors or participants in the wrongs which we find to have inspired and dominated the combination from the beginning."

and further in dealing with the question of whether there should be a permanent injunction or a receivership, the Court said:

> "* * * we do not think we can now direct the immediate application of either of these remedies. * * * to at once stay the movement in interstate commerce of the products which the combination or its cooperating forces produce or control might inflict infinite injury upon the public by leading to a stoppage of supply and a great enhancement of prices. The second because the extensive power which would result from at once resorting to a receivership might not only do grievous injury to the public, but also cause widespread and perhaps irreparable loss to many innocent people."

In Sugar Institute v. United States, 297 U. S. 553, 604, the Court denied certain affirmative relief, saying that it > "* * * might well prejudice rather than serve the interests of fair competition and obstruct the useful and entirely lawful activities of the refiners."

In Hartford-Empire Co. v. United States, 323 U. S. 386, the Court generally sustained the District Court in directing remedial steps, but pointing out that > "* * * we may not impose penalties in the guise of preventing future violations" (p. 409).

and

> "* * * the court may not create, as to the defendants, new duties, prescription of which is the function of Congress, or place the defendants, for the future, 'in a different class than other people', as the Government has suggested" (pp. 409-10).

In United States v. Bausch & Lomb Co., 321 U. S. 707, 729, the Court said:

> "The Sherman Act is intended to prevent unreasonable restraints of commerce. * * * The federal courts have jurisdiction of suits to enjoin violations. Congress has been liberal in enacting remedies to enforce the anti-monopoly statutes. But in no instance has it indicated an intention to interfere with ordinary commercial practices."

From all of the above certain principles may be deduced.

1. A Court can enjoin the acts found to be illegal and take necessary and reasonable steps to prevent future recurrences.

2. The measures must be remedial rather than punitive. The defendants cannot be put in a class by themselves.

3. Private rights may not be invaded except to the extent necessary in the interests of the public.

4. The Court may not assume legislative functions.

In dealing with the several trade practices found to be illegal, and which the Court seeks to correct, not only by injunction, but by the application of the competitive bidding plan, the test of legality has been compatibility with this plan, rather than the terms of the Sherman Act. Thus, in dealing with master agreements containing separate provisions for licensing pictures for each particular theatre, the Court finds no illegality "if there is an opportunity for exhibitors to bid for the same runs at the offered price" (R., p. 3541). As to franchises, a reason given for illegality is that they "necessarily contravene the plan of licensing each picture theatre by theatre to the highest bidder" (R., p. 3541). As to "move-overs", the Court finds them illegal because they are "incompatible with the system we have prescribed of bidding for pictures and runs theatre by theatre" (R., p. 3542). As to "overage-and-underage" provisions, they are forbidden because it would not be possible to "practically apply the bidding system we are establishing" (R., p. 3542).

It is submitted that to make this particular device the test of illegality is, in effect, to write it into the Sherman Act and thus to assume a legislative function.

We do not find a case in which a court has forbidden private negotiation between buyer and seller, nor is any such Congressional intent indicated. It is especially provided in the Robinson-Patman Act (15 U. S. C. A. Sec. 13) that nothing therein contained "shall prevent persons engaged in selling goods, wares or merchandise in commerce from selecting their own customers in bona fide transactions and not in restraint of trade". If the Congress believes that discriminations in price between different purchasers of commodities of like grade and quantity do not require the remedy of requiring sales to be made only by public auction, is it not clear that it must take a similar view of such a restriction in a Sherman Act case in which the Court is dealing with the licensing of motion pictures? While conflicts between the Sherman Act and the Copyright Acts are inescapable, there seems no occasion in this instance for creating one by judicial direction. The danger of this precedent when applied to other industries and the damage it would cause to all forms of business is self-evident.

It is submitted that the direction for competitive bidding exceeds the authority of the Court in that it destroys a normal and legal method of dealing without promoting the public interest.

As previously stated and again reiterated, the result of the decree is to eliminate all competition between distributors and thus establish a combination in restraint of trade which the producer-distributors could not voluntarily establish because of the Sherman Act. It is no answer to this argument that a single producer, acting by itself, and not in pursuance of a plan adopted by all producers-defendants, can sell pictures by competitive bidding, and under such circumstances Intervenors would have no complaint. This may be true. But in such a case independent exhibitors could induce other major distributors to sell on other terms. And if they were free to do so, it is scarcely conceivable that all of them would uniformly refuse, in the absence of collusive action. It is the enforced uniform plan, adopted by all defendants on order of the Court which is the essence of both the wrong and the injury to Intervenors. Even if voluntary competitive bidding were invoked by a number of defendants acting individually, necessary alterations and concessions could be made as occasions arose to meet the practicabilities of the situation and changing economic conditions. The court system imposes a rigid strait-jacket on the industry for the entire future so long as the decree stands.

Again it may be argued that Intervenors are still free, despite the decree, to institute independent suits to enforce whatever rights they may possess. But the intent and purpose of the Court's order was to set up a plan of action, common to all distributors to enforce competitive bidding. Clearly, if any intervenor seeks to enjoin that combination or to collect damages from defendants on account of their activities pursuant to the plan authorized by the Court, he will be met with the defense that defendants are required by the Court to carry out this system of uniform action.

For example, suppose that through the enforcement of the uniform competitive bidding system, film rentals are forced so high that many of these Intervenors find their profits destroyed. Or suppose that on account of the exercise of the uncontrolled business judgment of the defendants in selecting successful bidders, many of these Intervenors find their theatres unable to operate for lack of features. Or suppose through the operation of the system, a theatre is unable to assure itself of a future supply of features, which assurance is necessary for its financial solvency. In these situations, any independent who brought a suit would be barred by the decree from a recovery.

The only answer would be that the Court below exceeded its jurisdiction. But certainly the District Court intends its decree to be a bar to any action by an independent which seeks relief inconsistent with its provisions—and there can be no question of the jurisdiction of that Court.

Conclusion.

1. Intervenors have not been adequately represented and their interests and property are adversely affected by the decree. They can only be restored to their rights by intervening in this proceeding and they are entitled to do so.

2. The provisions of Section II, paragraph 8, of the decree complained of should be eliminated. They set up a system which not only was not asked for by any of the parties but was affirmatively opposed by them on the few occasions that it was discussed and is unanimously opposed by the independent exhibitors who (presumably) were to benefit by the decree. There is no adequate evidence in the record justifying the Court in its conclusion that this system would either cure the ills sought to be cured or that it would not have serious harmful effects on the rights of innocent parties. Its impracticability has been clearly demonstrated. The modification of the provisions of the opinion by the later memorandum of the Court and the provisions of the decree is a tacit admission that the original directions were made without any real knowledge of their effects or any real comprehension of the complexities of the business involved. With competitive bidding eliminated the rights of any aggrieved exhibitor and of the public are amply protected by the reserved rights of the Attorney General, the reservation of jurisdiction, the provisions of Section II, paragraph 9, of the decree, and finally by his unquestioned right to recover triple damages in a proper case.

3. The net result of the inclusion of these provisions is to punish the independent exhibitors who are innocent parties and to create a legally protected combination in restraint of trade for the benefit of the major defendants who were the persons against whom relief was sought.

If due weight is to be given to the lesson afforded by exhibitors' well founded fears in respect to the Consent Decree (R., p. 2750), and it is submitted that such weight should be given to them, then their present expectations and objections alone justify the elimination of competitive bidding.

In short, the position of the Government is that if there is not to be divestiture, competitive bidding is an acceptable substitute. This is borne out by the concluding paragraph of the plaintiff's jurisdictional statement at page 22 thereof:

> "* * * If the District Court is right in its assumption that the untried and unenforceable competitive bidding relief is an adequate substitute for the traditional divestiture relief and complete prohibition of further agreement among the guilty defendants, traditionally applied in situations of this character, then a proceeding under Section 4 of the Sherman Act has become an instrument for protecting an established monopoly from either judicial or legislative correction."

Whomsoever the plaintiff may be said to have represented up to the time the June, 1946 opinion was rendered, since that time, as long as the Government does not actively oppose competitive bidding, it does not represent the Intervenors.

In the District Court one of the defendants (Universal) voiced opposition to competitive bidding but not on the grounds which Intervenors advance (R., p. 2978). The three so-called minor defendants, Universal, United and Columbia, have assigned as error the competitive bidding provisions of the decree (R., pp. 3802, 3782, 3760) but their position as producers or producer-distributors is so different from and in most ways so diametrically opposed to the position of Intervenors that in no sense can it be fairly said that they represent Intervenors.

It therefore clearly appears that the Intervenors have not been, are not now and will not be adequately represented by any of the existing parties. Indeed it is not a case of adequacy of representation for the Intervenors' interests are not represented at all. This contention is fully supported by the decisions on facts which we believe to be far less persuasive.

C.

The application to intervene was timely made.

The history of the facts leading up to the filing of the application to intervene is given in the original petition (R., p. 3578). That the petition was timely filed under the circumstances and has not delayed the rendition of the final decree so clearly appears from the record, and since no party has raised the question and the District Court said the point need not be argued (R., p. 2834), the point will not be further discussed.

D.

The motion to intervene in this Court should be granted.

Intervenors moved to intervene directly in this Court on the authority of the decision in United States v. Terminal Railroad Assn. of St. Louis, supra. In the case just cited, the petitioners were deprived of a legal right against a public utility. In the case at bar, except for the provisions of the decree of which Intervenors complain, they could have a clear legal right to enjoin a plan for concerted action by the distributors to enforce competitive bidding which the decree attempts to legalize. The decree, by approving that plan, cuts off Intervenors' legal right as effectively as the intervenor's right was cut off in the St. Louis Terminal case.

The purpose of this suit is to safeguard private interests. As this Court said in Missouri-Kansas Pipe Line Co. v. United States, supra, in commenting upon the companion case of United States v. Columbia Gas & Electric Corp., 27 F. Supp. 116, arguments with respect to the Attorney General's guardianship of public interest misconceive the basis of the right asserted by the intervenors as "where the enforcement of a public law also demands distinct safeguarding of private interests * * * the power to enforce rights thus sanctioned is not left to the public authorities nor put in the keeping of the district court's discretion".

It would be a travesty of justice if intervention must be denied in a case as here where the Attorney General is not opposing the competitive bidding plan as such and therefore can be said to approve the combination in restraint of trade set up by the decree.

All of the arguments advanced above supporting the assertion that Intervenors should have been permitted to intervene in the District Court are equally applicable to intervention directly in this Court.

POINT II

The dissolution and trade practice reliefs, other than the competitive bidding requirement, will terminate the restraint of commerce by defendants found to be unlawful.

The Court in addition to the specific injunctive directions as to trade practices has provided that jurisdiction be retained in order to enforce compliance with its decree and has provided that the Attorney General have ac-

First. Restraint of Trade—(1) Price Fixing.

No film is sold to an exhibitor in the distribution of motion pictures. The right to exhibit under copyright is licensed. The District Court found that the defendants in the licenses they issued fixed minimum admission prices which the exhibitors agreed to charge, whether the rental of the film was a flat amount or a percentage of the receipts. It found that substantially uniform minimum prices had been established in the licenses of all defendants. Minimum prices were established in master agreements or franchises which were made between various defendants as distributors and various defendants as exhibitors and in joint operating agreements made by the five majors with each other and with independent theatre owners covering the operation of certain theatres.[4] By these later contracts minimum admission prices were often fixed for dozens of theatres owned by a particular defendant in a given area of the United States. Minimum prices were fixed in licenses of each of the five major defendants. The other three defendants made the same requirement in licenses granted to the exhibitor-defendants. We do not stop to elaborate on these findings. They are adequately detailed by the District Court in its opinion. See 66 F. Supp. 334–339.

[4] A master agreement is a licensing agreement or "blanket deal" covering the exhibition of features in a number of theatres, usually comprising a circuit.

A franchise is a licensing agreement, or series of licensing agreements, entered into as part of the same transaction, in effect for more than one motion picture season and covering the exhibition of features released by one distributor during the entire period of the agreement.

An independent as used in these cases means a producer, distributor, or exhibitor, as the context requires, which is not a defendant in the action, or a subsidiary or affiliate of a defendant.

The District Court found that two price-fixing conspiracies existed—a horizontal one between all the defendants; a vertical one between each distributor-defendant and its licensees. The latter was based on express agreements and was plainly established. The former was inferred from the pattern of price-fixing disclosed in the record. We think there was adequate foundation for it too. It is not necessary to find an express agreement in order to find a conspiracy. It is enough that a concert of action is contemplated and that the defendants conformed to the arrangement. Interstate Circuit v. United States, 306 U. S. 208, 226–227; United States v. Masonite, 316 U. S. 265, 275. That was shown here.

On this phase of the case the main attack is on the decree which enjoins the defendants and their affiliates from granting any license, except to their own theatres, in which minimum prices for admission to a theatre are fixed in any maner or by any means. The argument runs as follows: United States v. General Electric Co., 272 U. S. 476, held that an owner of a patent could, without violating the Sherman Act, grant a license to manufacture and vend, and could fix the price at which the licensee could sell the patented article. It is pointed out that defendants do not sell the films to exhibitors, but only license them and that the Copyright Act (35 Stat. 1075, 1088, 17 U. S. C. § 1), like the patent statutes, grants the owner exclusive rights.[5] And it is argued that if the patentee can fix the price at which his licensee may sell the patented article, the owner of the copyright should be allowed the same privilege. It is maintained that such a privilege is essential to protect the value of the copyrighted films.

We start, of course, from the premise that so far as the Sherman Act is concerned, a price-fixing combination is

[May 3, 1948.]

MR. JUSTICE DOUGLAS delivered the opinion of the Court.

These cases are here on appeal [1] from a judgment of a three-judge District Court [2] holding that the defendants had violated § 1 and § 2 of the Sherman Act, 26 Stat. 209, as amended, 50 Stat. 693, 15 U. S. C. §§ 1, 2, and granting an injunction and other relief. 66 F. Supp. 323; 70 F. Supp. 53.

The suit was instituted by the United States under § 4 of the Sherman Act to prevent and restrain violations of it. The defendants fall into three groups: (1) Paramount Pictures, Inc., Loew's, Incorporated, Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation, Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc., Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation, which produce motion pictures, and their respective subsidiaries or affiliates which distribute and exhibit films. These are known as the five major defendants or exhibitor-defendants. (2) Columbia Pictures Corporation and Universal Corporation, which produce motion pictures, and their subsidiaries which distribute films. (3) United Artist Corporation, which is engaged only in the distribution of motion pictures. The five majors, through their subsidiaries or affiliates, own or control theatres; the other defendants do not.

The complaint charged that the producer defendants had attempted to monopolize and had monopolized the production of motion pictures. The District Court found to the contrary and that finding is not challenged here. The complaint charged that all the defendants, as distributors, had conspired to restrain and monopolize and had restrained and monopolized interstate trade in the distribution and exhibition of films by specific practices which we will shortly relate. It also charged that the five major defendants had engaged in a conspiracy to restrain and monopolize, and had restrained and monopolized, interstate trade in the exhibition of motion pictures in most of the larger cities of the country. It charged that the vertical combination of producing, distributing, and exhibiting motion pictures by each of the five major defendants violated § 1 and § 2 of the Act. It charged that each distributor-defendant had entered into various contracts with exhibitors which unreasonably restrained trade. Issue was joined; and a trial was had.[3]

[3] Before trial, negotiations for a settlement were undertaken. As a result, a consent decree against the five major defendants was entered November 20, 1940. The consent decree contained no admission of violation of law and adjudicated no issue of fact or law, except that the complaint stated a cause of action. The decree reserved to the United States the right at the end of a three-year trial period to seek the relief prayed for in the amended complaint. After the end of the three-year period the United States moved for trial against all the defendants.

illegal per se. United States v. Socony-Vacuum Oil Co., 310 U. S. 150; United States v. Masonite Corporation, supra. We recently held in United States v. Gypsum Co., 333 U. S. —, that even patentees could not regiment an entire industry by licenses containing price-fixing agreements. What was said there is adequate to bar defendants, through their horizontal conspiracy, from fixing prices for the exhibition of films in the movie industry. Certainly the rights of the copyright owner are no greater than those of the patentee.

Nor can the result be different when we come to the vertical conspiracy between each distributor-defendant and his licensees. The District Court stated in its findings:

> "In agreeing to maintain a stipulated minimum admission price, each exhibitor thereby consents to the minimum price level at which it will compete against other licensees of the same distributor whether they exhibit on the same run or not. The total effect is that through the separate contracts between the distributor and its licensees a price structure is erected which regulates the licensees' ability to compete against one another in admission prices."

That consequence seems to us to be incontestable. We stated in United States v. Gypsum Co., supra, p. —, that "The rewards which flow to the patentee and his licensees from the suppression of competition through the regulation of an industry are not reasonably and normally adapted to secure pecuniary reward for the patentee's monopoly." The same is true of the rewards of the copyright owners and their licensees in the present case. For here too the licenses are but a part of the general plan to suppress competition. The case where a distributor fixes admission prices to be charged by a single independent exhibitor, no other licensees or exhibitors being in contemplation, seems to be wholly academic, as the District Court pointed out. It is, therefore, plain that United States v. General Electric Co., supra, as applied in the patent cases, affords no haven to the defendants in this case. For a copyright may no more be used than a patent to deter competition between rivals in the exploitation of their licenses. See Interstate Circuit v. United States, supra, p. 230.

Clearances are designed to protect a particular run of a film against a subsequent run.[6] The District Court found that all of the distributor-defendants used clearance provisions and that they were stated in several different ways or in combinations: in terms of a given period between designated runs; in terms of admission prices charged by competing theatres; in terms of a given period of clearance over specifically named theatres; in terms of so many days' clearance over specified areas or towns; or in terms of clearances as fixed by other distributors.

The Department of Justice maintained below that clearances are unlawful per se under the Sherman Act. But that is a question we need not consider, for the District Court ruled otherwise and that conclusion is not challenged here. In its view their justification was found in the assurance they give the exhibitor that the distributor will not license a competitor to show the film either at the same time or so soon thereafter that the exhibitor's expected income from the run will be greatly [6] A clearance is the period of time, usually stipulated in license contracts, which must elapse between runs of the same feature within a particular area or in specified theatres.

Runs are successive exhibitions of a feature in a given area, first-run being the first exhibition in that area, second-run being the next subsequent, and so on, and include successive exhibitions in different theatres, even though such theatres may be under a common ownership or management.

diminished. A clearance when used to protect that interest of the exhibitor was reasonable, in the view of the court, when not unduly extended as to area or duration. Thus the court concluded that although clearances might indirectly affect admission prices, they do not fix them and that they may be reasonable restraints of trade under the Sherman Act.

The District Court held that in determining whether a clearance is unreasonable, the following factors are relevant:

> (2) The character and location of the theatres involved, including size, type of entertainment, appointments, transit facilities, etc.;
>
> (3) The policy of operation of the theatres involved, such as the showing of double features, gift nights, give-aways, premiums, cut-rate tickets, lotteries, etc.;
>
> (4) The rental terms and license fees paid by the theatres involved and the revenues derived by the distributor-defendant from such theatres;
>
> (5) The extent to which the theatres involved compete with each other for patronage;
>
> (6) The fact that a theatre involved is affiliated with a defendant-distributor or with an independent circuit of theatres should be disregarded; and
> (7) There should be no clearance between theatres not in substantial competition.

It reviewed the evidence in light of these standards and concluded that many of the clearances granted by the defendants were unreasonable. We do not stop to retrace those steps. The evidence is ample to show, as the District Court plainly demonstrated, see 66 F. Supp. pp. 343–346, that many clearances had no relation to the competitive factors which alone could justify them.[7] The clearances which were in vogue had, indeed, acquired a fixed and uniform character and were made applicable to situations without regard to the special circumstances which are necessary to sustain them as reasonable restraints of trade. The evidence is ample to support the finding of the District Court that the defendants either participated in evolving this uniform system of clearances or acquiesced in it and so furthered its existence. That evidence, like the evidence on the price-fixing phase of the case, is therefore adequate to support the finding of a conspiracy to restrain trade by imposing unreasonable clearances.

The District Court enjoined defendants and their affiliates from agreeing with each other or with any exhibitors or distributors to maintain a system of clearances, or from granting any clearance between theatres not in substantial competition, or from granting or enforcing any clearance against theatres in substantial competition with the theatre receiving the license for exhibition in excess of what is reasonably necessary to protect the licensee in the run granted. In view of the findings this relief was plainly warranted.

Some of the defendants ask that this provision be construed (or, if necessary, modified) to allow licensors in granting clearances to take into consideration what is reasonably necessary for a fair return to the licensor.

[7] Thus the District Court found:

"Some licenses granted clearance to sell to all theatres which the exhibitor party to the contract might thereafter own, lease, control, manage, or operate against all theatres in the immediate vicinity of the exhibitor's theatre thereafter erected or opened. The purpose of this type of clearance agreements was to fix the run and clearance status of any theatre thereafter opened not on the basis of its appointments, size, location, and other competitive features normally entering into such determination, but rather upon the sole basis of whether it were operated by the exhibitor party to the agreement."

We reject that suggestion. If that were allowed, then the exhibitor-defendants would have an easy method of keeping alive at least some of the consequences of the effective conspiracy which they launched. For they could then justify clearances granted by other distributors in favor of their theatres in terms of the competitive requirements of those theatres, and at the same time justify the restrictions they impose upon independents in terms of the necessity of protecting their film rental as licensor. That is too potent a weapon to leave in the hands of those whose proclivity to unlawful conduct has been so marked. It plainly should not be allowed so long as the exhibitor-defendants own theatres. For in its baldest terms it is in the hands of the defendants no less than a power to restrict the competition of others in the way deemed most desirable by them. In the setting of this case the only measure of reasonableness of a clearance by Sherman Act standards is the special needs of the licensee for the competitive advantages it affords.

Whether the same restrictions would be applicable to a producer who had not been a party to such a conspiracy is a question we do not reach.

Objection is made to a further provision of this part of the decree stating that "Whenever any clearance provision is attacked as not legal under the provisions of this decree, the burden shall be upon the distributor to sustain the legality thereof." We think that provision was justified. Clearances have been used along with price fixing to suppress competition with the theatres of the exhibitor-defendants and with other favored exhibitors. The District Court could therefore have eliminated clearances completely for a substantial period of time, even though, as it thought, they were not illegal per se. For equity has the power to uproot all parts of an illegal scheme—the valid as well as the invalid—in order to rid the trade or commerce of all taint of the conspiracy. United States v. Bausch & Lomb Co., 321 U. S. 707, 724. The court certainly then could take the lesser step of making them prima facie invalid. But we do not rest on that alone. As we have said, the only justification for clearances in the setting of this case is in terms of the special needs of the licensee for the competitive advantages they afford. To place on the distributor the burden of showing their reasonableness is to place it on the one party in the best position to evaluate their competitive effects. Those who have shown such a marked proclivity for unlawful conduct are in no position to complain that they carry the burden of showing that their future clearances come within the law. Cf. United States v. Crescent Amusement Co., 323 U. S. 173, 188.

(3) Pooling Agreements; Joint Ownership.

The District Court found the exhibitor-defendants had agreements with each other and their affiliates by which theatres of two or more of them, normally competitive, were operated as a unit, or managed by a joint committee or by one of the exhibitors, the profits being shared according to prearranged percentages. Some of these agreements provided that the parties might not acquire other competitive theatres without first offering them for inclusion in the pool. The court concluded that the result of these agreements was to eliminate competition pro tanto both in exhibition and in distribution of features,[4] since the parties would naturally direct the films to the theatres in whose earnings they were interested.

The District Court also found that the exhibitor-defendants had like agreements with certain independent exhibitors. Those alliances had, in its view, the effect of nullifying competition between the allied theatres and of making more effective the competition of the group against theatres not members of the pool. The court found that in some cases the operating agreements were achieved through leases of theatres, the rentals being measured by a percentage of profits earned by the theatres in the pool. The District Court required the dissolution of existing pooling agreements and enjoined any future arrangement of that character.

These provisions of the decree will stand. The practices were bald efforts to substitute monopoly for competition and to strengthen the hold of the exhibitor-defendants on the industry by alignment of competitors on their side. Clearer restraints of trade are difficult to imagine.

There was another type of business arrangement that the District Court found to have the same effect as the pooling agreements just mentioned. Many theatres are owned jointly by two or more exhibitor-defendants or by an exhibitor-defendant and an independent.[9] The result is; according to the District Court, that the theatres are operated "collectively, rather than competitively." And where the joint owners are an exhibitor-defendant and an independent the effect is, according to the District Court, the elimination by the exhibitor-defendant of "putative competition between itself and the other joint owner, who otherwise would be in a position to operate theatres independently." The District Court found these joint ownerships of theatres to be unreasonable restraints of trade within the meaning of the Sherman Act.

The District Court ordered the exhibitor-defendants to disaffiliate by terminating their joint ownership of theatres; and it enjoined future acquisitions of such interests. One is authorized to buy out the other if it shows to the satisfaction of the District Court and that court first finds that such acquisition "will not unduly restrain competition in the exhibition of feature motion pictures." This dissolution and prohibition of joint ownership as between exhibitor-defendants was plainly warranted. To the extent that they have joint interests in the outlets for their films each in practical effect grants the other a priority for the exhibition of its films. For in this situation, as in the case where theatres are jointly managed, the natural gravitation of films is to the theatres in whose earnings the distributors have an interest. Joint ownership between exhibitor-defendants then becomes a device for strengthening their competitive position as exhibitors by forming an alliance as distributors. An express agreement to grant each other the preference would be a most effective weapon to stifle competition. A working arrangement or business device that has that necessary consequence gathers no immunity because of its subtlety. Each is a restraint of trade condemned by the Sherman Act.

The District Court also ordered disaffiliation in those instances where theatres were jointly owned by an exhibitor-defendant and an independent, and where the interest of the exhibitor-defendant was "greater than five per cent unless such interest shall be ninety-five per cent or more," an independent being defined for this part of the decree as "any former, present or putative motion picture theatre operator which is not owned or controlled by the defendant holding the interest in question." The exhibitor-defendants are authorized to acquire existing interests of the independents in these theatres if they establish, and if the District Court first finds that the acquisition "will not unduly restrain competition in the exhibition of feature motion pictures." All other acquisitions of such joint interests were enjoined.

This phase of the decree is strenuously attacked. We are asked to eliminate it for lack of findings to support it. The argument is that the findings show no more than the existence of joint ownership of theatres by exhibitor-defendants and independents. The statement by the District Court that the joint ownership eliminates "putative competition" is said to be a mere conclusion without evidentiary support. For it is said that the facts of the record show that many of the instances of joint ownership with an independent interest are cases wholly devoid of any history of or relationship to restraints of trade or monopolistic practices. Some are said to be rather fortuitous results of bankruptcies; others are said to be the results of investments by outside interests who have no desire or capacity to operate theatres, and so on.

It is conceded that the District Court made no inquiry into the circumstances under which a particular interest had been acquired. It treated all relationships alike, insofar as the disaffiliation provision of the decree is concerned. In this we think it erred.

We have gone into the record far enough to be confident that at least some of these acquisitions by the exhibitor-defendants were the products of the unlawful practices which the defendants have inflicted on the industry. To the extent that these acquisitions were the fruits of monopolistic practices or restraints of trade, they should be divested. And no permission to buy out the other owner should be given a defendant. United States v. Crescent Amusement Co., supra, p. 189; Schine Chain Theatres, Inc. v. United States, ante, p.—. Moreover, even if lawfully acquired, they may have been utilized as part of the conspiracy to eliminate or suppress competition in furtherance of the ends of the conspiracy. In that event divestiture would likewise be justified. United States v. Crescent Amusement Co., supra, pp. 189–190. In that situation permission to acquire the interest of the independent would have the unlawful effect of permitting the defendants to complete their plan to eliminate him.

Furthermore, if the joint ownership is an alliance with one who is or would be an operator but for the joint ownership, divorce should be decreed even though the affiliation was innocently acquired. For that joint ownership would afford opportunity to perpetuate the effects of the restraints of trade which the exhibitor-defendants have inflicted on the industry.

It seems, however, that some of the cases of joint ownership do not fall into any of the categories we have listed. Some apparently involve no more than innocent investments by those who are not actual or potential operators. If in such cases the acquisition was not improperly used in furtherance of the conspiracy, its retention by defendants would be justified absent a finding that no monopoly resulted. And in those instances permission might be given the defendants to acquire the interests of the independents on a showing by them and a finding by the court that neither monopoly nor unreasonable restraint of trade in the exhibition of films would result. In short, we see no reason to place a ban on this type of ownership, at least so long as theatre ownership by the five majors is not prohibited. The results of inquiry along the lines we have indicated must await further findings of the District Court on remand of the cause.

(4) Formula Deals, Master Agreements, and Franchises.

A formula deal is a licensing agreement with a circuit of theatres in which the license fee of a given feature is measured, for the theatres covered by the agreement, by a specified percentage of the feature's national gross. The District Court found that Paramount and RKO had made formula deals with independent and affiliated circuits. The circuit was allowed to allocate playing time and film rentals among the various theatres as it saw fit. The inclusion of theatres of a circuit into a single agreement gives no opportunity for other theatre owners to bid for the feature in their respective areas and, in the view of the District Court, is therefore an unreasonable restraint of trade. The District Court found some master agreements[10] open to the same objection. Those are the master agreements that cover exhibition in two or more theatres in a particular circuit and allow the exhibitor to allocate the film rental paid among the theatres as it sees fit and to exhibit the features upon such playing time as it deems best, and leave other terms to the discretion of the circuit. The District Court enjoined the making or further performance of any formula deal of the type described above. It also enjoined the making or further performance of any master agreement covering the exhibition of features in a number of theatres.

The findings of the District Court in these respects are supported by facts, its conclusion that the formula deals and master agreements constitute restraint of trade is valid, and the relief is proper. The formula deals and master agreements are unlawful restraints of trade in two respects. In the first place, they eliminate the possibility of bidding for films theatre by theatre. In that way they eliminate the opportunity for the small competitor to obtain the choice first runs, and put a premium on the size of the circuit. They are, therefore, devices for stifling competition and diverting the cream of the business to the large operators. In the second place, the pooling of the purchasing power of an entire circuit in bidding for films is a misuse of monopoly power insofar as it combines the theatres in closed towns with competitive situations. The reasons have been stated in United States v. Griffith, ante, p. —, and Schine Chain Theatres, Inc. v. United States, ante, p. —, and need not be repeated here. It is hardly necessary to add that distributors who join in such arrangements by exhibitors are active participants in effectuating a restraint of trade and a monopolistic practice. See United States v. Crescent Amusement Co., supra, p. 183.

The District Court also enjoined the making or further performance of any franchise. A franchise is a contract with an exhibitor which extends over a period of more than a motion picture season and covers the exhibition of features released by the distributor during the period of the agreement. The District Court held that a franchise constituted a restraint of trade because a period of more than one season was too long and the inclusion of all features was disadvantageous to competitors. At least that is the way we read its findings.

Universal and United Artists object to the outlawry of franchise agreements. Universal points out that the charge of illegality of franchises in these cases was restricted to franchises with theatres owned by the major defendants and to franchises with circuits or theatres in a circuit, a circuit being defined in the complaint as a group of more than five theatres controlled by the same person or a group of more than five theatres which combine through a common agent in licensing films. It seems, therefore, that the legality of franchises to other exhibitors (except as to block-booking, a practice to which we will later advert) was not in issue in the litigation. Moreover, the findings on franchises are clouded by the statement of the District Court in the opinion that franchises "necessarily contravene the plan of licensing each picture, theatre by theatre, to the highest bidder." As will be seen hereafter, we eliminate from the decree the provision for competitive bidding. But for its inclusion of competitive bidding the District Court might well have treated the problem of franchises differently.

We can see how if franchises were allowed to be used between the exhibitor-defendants each might be able to strengthen its strategic position in the exhibition field and continue the ill effects of the conspiracy which the decree is designed to dissipate. Franchise agreements may have been employed as devices to discriminate against some independents in favor of others. We know from the record that franchise agreements often contained discriminatory clauses operating in favor not only of theatres owned by the defendants but also of the large circuits. But we cannot say on this record that franchises are illegal per se when extended to any theatre or circuit no matter how small. The findings do not deal with the issue doubtlessly due to the fact that any system of franchises would necessarily conflict with the system of competitive bidding adopted by the District Court. Hence we set aside the findings on franchises so that the court may examine the problem in the light of the elimination from the decree of competitive bidding.

We do not take that course in the case of formula deals and master agreements, for the findings in these instances seem to stand on their own bottom and apparently have no necessary dependency on the provision for competitive bidding.

(5) Block-Booking.

Block-booking is the practice of licensing, or offering for license, one feature or group of features on condition that the exhibitor will also license another feature or group of features released by the distributors during a given period. The films are licensed in blocks before they are actually produced. All the defendants, except United Artists, have engaged in the practice. Block-booking prevents competitors from bidding for single features on their individual merits. The District Court held it illegal for that reason and for the reason that it "adds to the monopoly of a single copyrighted picture that of another copyrighted picture which must be taken and exhibited in order to secure the first." That enlargement of the monopoly of the copyright was condemned below in reliance on the principle which forbids the owner of a patent to condition its use on the purchase or use of patented or unpatented materials. See Ethyl Gasoline Corporation v. United States, 309 U. S. 436, 459; Morton Salt Co. v. Suppiger Co., 314 U. S. 488, 491; Mercoid Corp. v. Mid-Continent Investment Co., 320 U. S. 661, 665. The court enjoined defendants from performing or entering into any license in which the right to exhibit one feature is conditioned upon the licensee's taking one or more other features.[11]

We approve that restriction. The copyright law, like the patent statutes, makes reward to the owner a secondary consideration. In Fox Film Corp. v. Doyal, 286

[11] Blind-selling is a practice whereby a distributor licenses a feature before the exhibitor is afforded an opportunity to view it. To remedy the problems created by that practice the District Court included the following provision in its decree:

"To the extent that any of the features have not been trade shown prior to the granting of the license for more than a single feature, the licensee shall be given by the licensor the right to reject twenty per cent of such features not trade shown prior to the granting of the license, such right of rejection to be exercised in the order of release

U. S. 123, 127, Chief Justice Hughes spoke as follows respecting the copyright monopoly granted by Congress, "The sole interest of the United States and the primary object in conferring the monopoly lie in the general benefits derived by the public from the labors of authors." It is said that reward to the author or artist serves to induce release to the public of the products of his creative genius. But the reward does not serve its public purpose if it is not related to the quality of the copyright. Where a high quality film greatly desired is licensed only if an inferior one is taken, the latter borrows quality from the former and strengthens its monopoly by drawing on the other. The practice tends to equalize rather than differentiate the reward for the individual copyrights. Even where all the films included in the package are of equal quality, the requirement that all be taken if one is desired increases the market for some. Each stands not on its own footing but in whole or in part on the appeal which another film may have. As the District Court said, the result is to add to the monop-within ten days after there has been an opportunity afforded to the licensee to inspect the feature."

The court advanced the following as its reason for inclusion of this provision:

"Blind-selling does not appear to be as inherently restrictive of competition as block-booking, although it is capable of some abuse. By this practice a distributor could promise a picture of good quality or of a certain type which when produced might prove to be of poor quality or of another type—a competing distributor meanwhile being unable to market its product and in the end losing its outlets for future pictures. The evidence indicates that trade-shows, which are designated to prevent such blind-selling, are poorly attended by exhibitors. Accordingly, exhibitors who choose to obtain their films for exhibition in quantities, need to be protected against burdensome agreements by being given an option to reject a certain percentage of their blind-licensed pictures within a reasonable time after they shall have become available for inspection."

It is argued that Transparent-Wrap Machine Corp. v. Stokes & Smith Co., 329 U. S. 637, points to a contrary result. That case held that the inclusion in a patent license of a condition requiring the licensee to assign improvement patents was not per se illegal. But that decision, confined to improvement patents, was greatly influenced by the federal statute governing assignments of patents. It therefore has no controlling significance here.

Columbia Pictures makes an earnest argument that enforcement of the restriction as to block-booking will be very disadvantageous to it and will greatly impair its ability to operate profitably. But the policy of the anti-trust laws is not qualified or conditioned by the convenience of those whose conduct is regulated. Nor can a vested interest in a practice which contravenes the policy of the anti-trust laws receive judicial sanction.

We do not suggest that films may not be sold in blocks or groups, when there is no requirement, express or implied, for the purchase of more than one film. All we hold to be illegal is a refusal to license one or more copyrights unless another copyright is accepted.

[12] The exclusive right granted by the Copyright Act, 35 Stat. 1075, 17 U. S. C. § 1 includes no such privilege. It provides, so far as material here, as follows:

"That any person entitled thereto, upon complying with the provisions of this Act, shall have the exclusive right:

"(d) To perform or represent the copyrighted work publicly if it be a drama or, if it be a dramatic work and not reproduced in copies for sale, to vend any manuscript or any record whatsoever thereof; to make or to procure the making of any transcription or record thereof by or from which, in whole or in part, it may in any manner or by any method be exhibited, performed, represented, produced, or reproduced; and to exhibit, perform, represent, produce, or reproduce it in any manner or by any method whatsoever;"

(6) Discrimination.

The District Court found that defendants had discriminated against small independent exhibitors and in favor of large affiliated and unaffiliated circuits through various kinds of contract provisions. These included suspension of the terms of a contract if a circuit theatre remained closed for more than eight weeks with reinstatement without liability on reopening; allowing large privileges in the selection and elimination of films; allowing deductions in film rentals if double bills are played; granting moveovers [13] and extended runs; granting road show privileges; [14] allowing overage and underage; [15] granting unlimited playing time; excluding foreign pictures and those of independent producers; and granting rights to question the classification of features for rental purposes. The District Court found that the competitive advantages of these provisions were so great that their inclusion in contracts with the larger circuits and their exclusion from contracts with the small independents constituted an unreasonable discrimination against the latter. Each discriminatory contract constituted a conspiracy between licensor and licensee. Hence the District Court deemed it unnecessary to decide whether the defendants had conspired among themselves to make these discriminations. No provision of the decree specifically enjoins these discriminatory practices [13] A moveover is the privilege given a licensee to move a picture from one theatre to another as a continuation of the run at the licensee's first theatre.

[14] A road show is a public exhibition of a feature in a limited number of theatres, in advance of its general release, at admission prices higher than those customarily charged in first-run theatres in those areas.

[15] Underage and overage refer to the practice of using excess film rental earned in one circuit theatre to fulfill a rental committment defaulted by another.

because they were thought to be impossible under the system of competitive bidding adopted by the District Court.

These findings are amply supported by the evidence. We concur in the conclusion that these discriminatory practices are included among the restraints of trade which the Sherman Act condemns. See Interstate Circuit v. United States, supra, p. 231; United States v. Crescent Amusement Co., supra, pp. 182–183. It will be for the District Court on remand of these cases to provide effective relief against their continuance, as our elimination of the provision for competitive bidding leaves this phase of the cases unguarded.

There is some suggestion on this as well as on other phases of the cases that large exhibitors with whom defendants dealt fathered the illegal practices and forced them onto the defendants. But as the District Court observed, that circumstance if true does not help the defendants. For acquiescence in an illegal scheme is as much a violation of the Sherman Act as the creation and promotion of one.

Second—Competitive Bidding.

The District Court concluded that the only way competition could be introduced into the existing system of fixed prices, clearances and runs was to require that films be licensed on a competitive bidding basis. Films are to be offered to all exhibitors in each competitive area.[16] The license for the desired run is to be granted to the highest responsible bidder, unless the distributor rejects [16] Competitive bidding is required only in a "competitive area" where it is "desired by the exhibitors." As the District Court said, "the decree provides an opportunity to bid for any exhibitor in a competitive area who may desire to do so."

all offers. The licenses are to be offered and taken theatre by theatre and picture by picture. Licenses to show films in theatres, in which the licensor owns directly or indirectly an interest of ninety-five per cent or more, are excluded from the requirement for competitive bidding.

Paramount is the only one of the five majors who opposes the competitive bidding system. Columbia Pictures, Universal, and United Artists oppose it. The intervenors representing certain independents oppose it. And the Department of Justice, which apparently proposed the system originally, speaks strongly against it here.

At first blush there is much to commend the system of competitive bidding. The trade victims of this conspiracy have in large measure been the small independent operators. They are the ones that have felt most keenly the discriminatory practices and predatory activities in which defendants have freely indulged. They have been the victims of the massed purchasing power of the larger units in the industry. It is largely out of the ruins of the small operators that the large empires of exhibitors have been built. Thus it would appear to be a great boon to them to substitute open bidding for the private deals and favors on which the large operators have thrived. But after reflection we have concluded that competitive bidding involves the judiciary so deeply in the daily operation of this nation-wide business and promises such dubious benefits that it should not be undertaken.

Each film is to be licensed on a particular run to "the highest responsible bidder, having a theatre of a size, location and equipment adequate to yield a reasonable return to the licensor." The bid "shall state what run such exhibitor desires and what he is willing to pay for such feature, which statement may specify a flat rental, or a percentage of gross receipts, or both, or any other form of rental, and shall also specify what clearance such exhibitor is willing to accept, the time and days when such exhibitor desires to exhibit it, and any other offers which such exhibitor may care to make." We do not doubt that if a competitive bidding system is adopted all these provisions are necessary. For the licensing of films at auction is quite obviously a more complicated matter than the like sales for cash of tobacco, wheat, or other produce. Columbia puts these pertinent queries: "No two exhibitors are likely to make the same bid as to dates, clearance, method of fixing rental, etc. May bids containing such diverse factors be readily compared? May a flat rental bid be compared with a percentage bid? May the value of any percentage bid be determined unless the admission price is fixed by the license?"

The question as to who is the highest bidder involves the use of standards incapable of precise definition because the bids being compared contain different ingredients. Determining who is the most responsible bidder likewise cannot be reduced to a formula. The distributor's judgment of the character and integrity of a particular exhibitor might result in acceptance of a lower bid than others offered. Yet to prove that favoritism was shown would be well nigh impossible, unless perhaps all the exhibitors in the country were given classifications of responsibility. If, indeed, the choice between bidders is not to be entrusted to the uncontrolled discretion of the distributors, some effort to standardize the factors involved in determining "a reasonable return to the licensor" would seem necessary.

We mention these matters merely to indicate the character of the job of supervising such a competitive bidding system. It would involve the judiciary in the administration of intricate and detailed rules governing priority, period of clearance, length of run, competitive areas, reasonable return, and the like. The system would be apt to require as close a supervision as a continuous receivership, unless the defendants were to be entrusted with vast discretion. The judiciary is unsuited to affairs of business management; and control through the power of contempt is crude and clumsy and lacking in the flexibility necessary to make continuous and detailed supervision effective. Yet delegation of the management of the system to the discretion of those who had the genius to conceive the present conspiracy and to execute it with the subtlety which this record reveals, could be done only with the greatest reluctance. At least such choices should not be faced unless the need for the system is great and its benefits plain.

The system uproots business arrangements and established relationships with no apparent overall benefit to the small independent exhibitor. If each feature must go to the highest responsible bidder, those with the greatest purchasing power would seem to be in a favored position. Those with the longest purse—the exhibitor-defendants and the large circuits—would seem to stand in a preferred position. If in fact they were enabled through the competitive bidding system to take the cream of the business, eliminate the smaller independents, and thus increase their own strategic hold on the industry, they would have the cloak of the court's decree around them for protection. Hence the natural advantage which the larger and financially stronger exhibitors would seem to have in the bidding gives us pause. If a premium is placed on purchasing power, the court-created system may be a powerful factor towards increasing the concentration of economic power in the industry rather than cleansing the competitive system of unwholesome practices. For where the system in operation promises the advantage to the exhibitor who is in the strongest financial position, the injunction against discrimination [17] is apt to hold an empty promise. In this connection it should be noted that even though the independents in a given competitive area do not want competitive bidding, the exhibitor-defendants can invoke the system.

Our doubts concerning the competitive bidding system are increased by the fact that defendants who own theatres are allowed to pre-empt their own features. They thus start with an inventory which all other exhibitors lack. The latter have no prospect of assured runs except what they get by competitive bidding. The proposed system does not offset in any way the advantages which the exhibitor-defendants have by way of theatre ownership. It would seem in fact to increase them. For the independents are deprived of the stability which flows from established business relationships. Under the proposed system they can get features only if they are the highest responsible bidders. They can no longer depend on their private sources of supply which their ingenuity has created. Those sources, built perhaps on private relationships and representing important items of good will, are banned, even though they are free of any taint of illegality.

The system was designed, as some of the defendants put it, to remedy the difficulty of any theatre to break into or change the existing system of runs and clearances. But we do not see how, in practical operation, the proposed system of competitive bidding is likely to open up to competition the markets which defendants' unlawful restraints have dominated. Rather real danger seems to us to lie in the opportunities the system affords the exhibitor-defendants and the other large operators to strengthen their hold in the industry. We are reluctant to alter decrees in these cases where there is agreement with the District Court on the nature of the violations. United States v. Crescent Amusement Co., supra, p. 185; International Salt Co. v. United States, 332 U. S. 392, 400. But the provisions for competitive bidding in these cases promise little in the way of relief against the real evils of the conspiracy. They implicate the judiciary heavily in the details of business management if supervision is to be effective. They vest powerful control in the exhibitor-defendants over their competitors if close supervision by the court is not undertaken. In light of these considerations we conclude that the competitive bidding provisions of the decree should be eliminated so that a more effective decree may be fashioned.

We have already indicated in preceding parts of this opinion that this alteration in the decree leaves a hiatus or two which will have to be filled on remand of the cases. We will indicate hereafter another phase of the problem which the District Court should also reconsider in view of this alteration in the decree. But out of an abundance of caution we add this additional word. The competitive bidding system was perhaps the central arch of the decree designed by the District Court. Its elimination may affect the cases in ways other than those which we expressly mention. Hence on remand of the cases the freedom of the District Court to reconsider the adequacy of decree is not limited to those parts we have specifically indicated.

Third. Monopoly, Expansion of Theatre Holdings, Divestiture.

There is a suggestion that the hold the defendants have on the industry is so great that a problem under the First Amendment is raised. Cf. Associated Press v. United States, 326 U. S. 1. We have no doubt that moving pictures, like newspapers and radio, are included in the press whose freedom is guaranteed by the First Amendment. That issue would be focused here if we had any question concerning monopoly in the production of moving pictures. But monopoly in production was eliminated as an issue in these cases, as we have noted.

The chief argument at the bar is phrased in terms of monopoly of exhibition, restraints on exhibition, and the like. Actually, the issue is even narrower than that. The main contest is over the cream of the exhibition business—that of the first-run theatres. By defining the issue so narrowly we do not intend to belittle its importance. It shows, however, that the question here is not what the public will see or if the public will be permitted to see certain features. It is clear that under the existing system the public will be denied access to none. If the public cannot see the features on the first-run, it may do so on the second, third, fourth, or later run. The central problem presented by these cases is which exhibitors get the highly profitable first-run business. That problem has important aspects under the Sherman Act. But it bears only remotely, if at all, on any question of freedom of the press, save only as timeliness of release may be a factor of importance in specific situations.

The controversy over monopoly relates to monopoly in exhibition and more particularly monopoly in the first-run phase of the exhibition business.

The five majors in 1945 had interests in somewhat over 17 per cent of the theatres in the United States—3,137 out of 18,076.[18] Those theatres paid 45 per cent

[18] The theatres which each of the five majors owned independently of the others were: Paramount 1,395 or 7.72 per cent; Warner 501 or 2.77 per cent; Loew's 135 or .74 per cent; Fox 636 or 3.52 per cent; RKO 109 or .60 per cent. There were in addition 361 theatres or about 2 per cent in which two or more of the five majors had joint interests. These figures exclude connections through film-buying or management contracts or through corporations in which a defendant owns an indirect minority stock interest.

These theatres are located in 922 towns in 48 States and the District of Columbia. For further description of the distribution of theatres see Bertrand, Evans, and Blanchard, The Motion Picture Industry—A Pattern of Control 15–16 (TNEC Monograph 43, 1941).

In the 92 cities of the country with populations over 100,000 at least 70 per cent of all the first-run theatres are affiliated with one or more of the five majors. In 4 of those cities the five majors have no theatres. In 38 of those cities there are no independent first-run theatres. In none of the remaining 50 cities did less than three of the distributor-defendants license their product on first run to theatres of the five majors. In 19 of the 50 cities less than three of the distributor-defendants licensed their product on first run to independent theatres. In a majority of the 50 cities the greater share of all of the features of defendants were licensed for first-run exhibition in the theatres of the five majors.

In about 60 per cent of the 92 cities having populations of over 100,000, independent theatres compete with those of the five majors in first-run exhibition. In about 91 per cent of the 92 cities there is competition between independent theatres and the theatres of the five majors or between theatres of the five majors themselves for first-run exhibition. In all of the 92 cities there is always competition in some run even where there is no competition in first runs.

In cities between 25,000 and 100,000 populations the five majors have interests in 577 of a total of 978 first-run theatres or about 60 per cent. In about 300 additional towns, mostly under 25,000, an operator affiliated with one of the five majors has all of the theatres in the town.

The District Court held that the five majors could not be treated collectively so as to establish claims of general monopolization in exhibition. It found that none of them was organized or had been maintained "for the purpose of achieving a national monopoly" in exhibition. It found that the five majors by their present theatre holdings "alone" (which aggregate a little more than one-sixth of all the theatres in the United States), "do not and cannot collectively or individually, have a monopoly of exhibition." The District Court also found that where a single defendant owns all of the first-run theatres in a town, there is no sufficient proof that the acquisition was for the purpose of creating a monopoly. It found rather that such consequence resulted from the inertness of competitors, their lack of financial ability to build theatres comparable to those of the five majors, or the preference of the public for the best equipped theatres. And the percentage of features on the market which any of the five majors could play in its own theatres was found to be relatively small and in nowise to approximate a monopoly of film exhibition.[19]

[19] The number of feature films released during the 1943-44 season by the eleven largest distributors is as follows:

	No. of Films	Percentages of Total
		With "Westerns" included	With "Westerns" excluded
Fox	33	8.31	9.85
Loew's	33	8.31	9.85
Paramount	31	7.81	9.25
RKO	38	9.57	11.34
Warner	19	4.79	5.67
Columbia	41	10.32	12.24
United Artists	16	4.04	4.78
Universal	49	12.34	14.63
Republic	–29 features –30 "Westerns"	14.86	8.66
Monogram	–26 features –16 "Westerns"	10.58	7.76
PRC	–20 features –16 "Westerns"	9.07	5.97
Totals	397 335 without "Westerns"	100.00	100.00

Even in respect of the theatres jointly owned or jointly operated by the defendants with each other or with independents the District Court found no monopoly or attempt to monopolize. Those joint agreements or ownership were found only to be unreasonable restraints of trade. The District Court, indeed, found no monopoly on any phase of the cases, although it did find an attempt to monopolize in the fixing of prices, the granting of unreasonable clearances, block-booking and the other unlawful restraints of trade we have already discussed. The "root of the difficulties," according to the District Court, lay not in theatre ownership but in those unlawful practices.

The District Court did, however, enjoin the five majors from expanding their present theatre holdings in any manner.[20] It refused to grant the request of the Department of Justice for total divestiture by the five majors of their theatre holdings. It found that total divestiture would be injurious to the five majors and damaging to the public. Its thought on the latter score was that the new set of theatre owners who would take the place of the five majors would be unlikely for some years to give the public as good service as those they supplanted "in view of the latter's demonstrated experience and skill in operating what must be regarded as in general the largest and best equipped theatres." Divestiture was, it thought, too harsh a remedy where there was available the alternative of competitive bidding. It accordingly concluded that divestiture was unnecessary "at least until the efficiency of that system has been tried and found wanting."

It is clear, so far as the five majors are concerned, that the aim of the conspiracy was exclusionary, i. e. it was designed to strengthen their hold on the exhibition field. In other words, the conspiracy had monopoly in exhibition for one of its goals, as the District Court held. Price, clearance, and run are interdependent. The clearance and run provisions of the licenses fixed the relative playing positions of all theatres in a certain area; the minimum price provisions were based on playing position—the first-run theatres being required to charge the highest prices, the second-run theatres the next highest, and so on. As the District Court found, "In effect, the distributor, by the fixing of minimum admission prices, attempts to give the prior-run exhibitors as near a monopoly of the patronage as possible."

It is, therefore, not enough in determining the need for divestiture to conclude with the District Court that none of the defendants was organized or has been maintained for the purpose of achieving a "national monopoly," nor that the five majors through their present theatre holdings "alone" do not and cannot collectively or individually have a monopoly of exhibition. For when the starting point is a conspiracy to effect a monopoly through restraints of trade, it is relevant to determine what the results of the conspiracy were even if they fell short of monopoly.

An example will illustrate the problem. In the popular sense there is a monopoly if one person owns the only theatre in town. That usually does not, however, constitute a violation of the Sherman Act. But as we noted in United States v. Griffith, ante, p. —, and see Schine Chain Theatres, Inc. v. United States, ante, p. —, even such an ownership is vulnerable in a suit by the United States under the Sherman Act if the property was acquired, or its strategic position maintained, as a result of practices which constitute unreasonable restraints of trade. Otherwise, there would be reward from the conspiracy through retention of its fruits. Hence the problem of the District Court does not end with enjoining continuance of the unlawful restraints nor with dissolving the combination which launched the conspiracy. Its function includes undoing what the conspiracy achieved. As we have discussed in Schine Chain Theatres, Inc. v. United States, ante, p. —, the requirement that the defendants restore what they unlawfully obtained is no more punishment than the familiar remedy of restitution. What findings would be warranted after such an inquiry in the present cases, we do not know. For the findings of the District Court do not cover this point beyond stating that monopoly was an objective of the several restraints of trade that stand condemned.

Moreover, the problem under the Sherman Act is not solved merely by measuring monopoly in terms of size or extent of holdings or by concluding that single ownerships were not obtained "for the purpose of achieving a national monopoly." It is the relationship of the unreasonable restraints of trade to the position of the defendants in the exhibition field (and more particularly in the first-run phase of that business) that is of first importance on the divestiture phase of these cases. That is the position we have taken in Schine Chain Theatres, Inc. v. United States, ante, p. —, in dealing with a projection of the same conspiracy through certain large circuits. Parity of treatment of the unaffiliated and the affiliated circuits requires the same approach here. For the fruits of the conspiracy which are denied the independents must also be denied the five majors. In this connection there is a suggestion that one result of the conspiracy was a geographical division of territory among the five majors. We mention it not to intimate that it is true but only to indicate the appropriate extent of the inquiry concerning the effect of the conspiracy in theatre ownership by the five majors.

The findings of the District Court are deficient on that score and obscure on another. The District Court in its findings speaks of the absence of a "purpose" on the part of any of the five majors to achieve a "national monopoly" in the exhibition of motion pictures. First, there is no finding as to the presence or absence of monopoly on the part of the five majors in the first-run field for the entire country, in the first-run field in the 92 largest cities of the country, or in the first-run field in separate localities. Yet the first-run field, which constitutes the cream of the exhibition business, is the core of the present cases. Section 1 of the Sherman Act outlaws unreasonable restraints irrespective of the amount of trade or commerce involved (United States v. Socony-Vacuum Oil Co., 310 U. S. 150, 224, 225, n. 59), and § 2 condemns monopoly of "any part" of trade or commerce. "Any part" is construed to mean an appreciable part of interstate or foreign trade or commerce. United States v. Yellow Cab Co., 332 U. S. 218, 225. Second, we pointed out in United States v. Griffith, ante p. —, that "specific intent" is not necessary to establish a "purpose or intent" to create a monopoly but that the requisite "purpose or intent" is present if monopoly results as a necessary consequence of what was done. The findings of the District Court on this phase of the cases are not clear, though we take them to mean by the absence of "purpose" the absence of a specific intent. So construed they are inconclusive. In any event they are ambiguous and must be recast on remand of the cases. Third, monopoly power, whether lawfully or unlawfully acquired, may violate § 2 of the Sherman Act though it remains unexercised (United States v. Griffith, ante, p. —), for as we stated in American Tobacco Co. v. United States, 328 U. S. 781, 809, 811, the existence of power "to exclude competition when it is desired to do so" is itself a violation of § 2, provided it is coupled with the purpose or intent to exercise that power. The District Court, being primarily concerned with the number and extent of the theatre holdings of defendants, did not address itself to this phase of the monopoly problem. Here also, parity of treatment as between independents and the five majors as theatre owners, who were tied into the same general conspiracy, necessitates consideration of this question.

Exploration of these phases of the cases would not be necessary if, as the Department of Justice argues, vertical integration of producing, distributing and exhibiting motion pictures is illegal per se. But the majority of the Court does not take that view. In the opinion of the majority the legality of vertical integration under the Sherman Act turns on (1) the purpose or intent with which it was conceived, or (2) the power it creates and the attendant purpose or intent. First, it runs afoul of the Sherman Act if it was a calculated scheme to gain control over an appreciable segment of the market and to restrain or suppress competition, rather than an expansion to meet legitimate business needs. United States v. Reading Co., 253 U. S. 26, 57; United States v. Lehigh Valley R. Co., 254 U. S. 255, 269–270. Second, a vertically integrated enterprise, like other aggregations of business units (United States v. Aluminum Co. of America, 148 F. 2d 416), will consitute monopoly which, though unexercised, violates the Sherman Act provided a power to exclude competition is coupled with a purpose or intent to do so. As we pointed out in United States v. Griffith, ante, p. —, n. 10, size is itself an earmark of monopoly power. For size carries with it an opportunity for abuse. And the fact that the power created by size was utilized in the past to crush or prevent competition is potent evidence that the requisite purpose or intent attends the presence of monopoly power. See United States v. Swift & Co., 286 U. S. 106, 116; United States v. Aluminum Co. of America, supra, p. 430. Likewise bearing on the question whether monopoly power is created by the vertical integration, is the nature of the market to be served (United States v. Aluminum Co. of America, supra, p. 430), and the leverage on the market which the particular vertical integration creates or makes possible.

These matters were not considered by the District Court. For that reason, as well as the others we have mentioned, the findings on monopoly and divestiture which we have discussed in this part of the opinion will be set aside. There is an independent reason for doing that. As we have seen, the District Court considered competitive bidding as an alternative to divestiture in the sense that it concluded that further consideration of divestiture should not be had until competitive bidding had been tried and found wanting. Since we eliminate from the decree the provisions for competitive bidding, it is necessary to set aside the findings on divestiture so that a new start on this phase of the cases may be made on their remand.

It follows that the provision of the decree barring the five majors from further theatre expansion should likewise be eliminated. For it too is related to the monopoly question; and the District Court should be allowed to make an entirely fresh start on the whole of the problem. We in no way intimate, however, that the District Court erred in prohibiting further theatre expansion by the five majors.

The Department of Justice maintains that if total divestiture is denied, licensing of films among the five majors should be barred. As a permanent requirement it would seem to be only an indirect way of forcing divestiture. For the findings reveal that the theatres of the five majors could not operate their theatres full time on their own films.[21] Whether that step would, in absence of competitive bidding, serve as a short range remedy in certain situations to dissipate the effects of the conspiracy (United States v. Univis Lens Co., 316 U. S. 241, 254; United States v. Bausch & Lomb Co., supra, p. 724; United States v. Crescent Amusement Co., supra, p. 188) is a question for the District Court.

[21] The District Court found, "Except for a very limited number of theatres in the very largest cities, the 18,000 and more theatres in the United States exhibit the product of more than one distributor. Such theatres could not be operated on the product of only one distributor."

Fourth.

The consent decree created an arbitration system which had, in the view of the District Court, proved useful in its operation. The court indeed thought that the arbitration system had dealt with the problems of clearances and runs "with rare efficiency." But it did not think it had the power to continue an arbitration system which would be binding on the parties, since the consent decree did not bind the defendants who had not consented to it and since the government, acting pursuant to the powers reserved under the consent decree, moved for trial of the issues charged in the complaint. The District Court recommended, however, that some such system be continued. But it included no such provision in its decree.

We agree that the government did not consent to a permanent system of arbitration under the consent decree and that the District Court has no power to force or require parties to submit to arbitration in lieu of the remedies afforded by Congress for enforcing the antitrust laws. But the District Court has the power to authorize the maintenance of such a system by those parties who consent and to provide the rules and procedure under which it is to operate. The use of the system would not, of course, be mandatory. It would be merely an auxiliary enforcement procedure, barring no one from the use of other remedies the law affords for violations either of the Sherman Act or of the decree of the court. Whether such a system of arbitration should be inaugurated is for the discretion of the District Court.

Fifth—Intervention.

Certain associations of exhibitors and a number of independent exhibitors, appellant-intervenors in Nos. 85 and 86, were denied leave to intervene in the District Court. They appeal from those orders. They also filed original motions for leave to intervene in this Court. We postponed consideration of the original motions and of our jurisdiction to hear the appeals until a hearing on the merits of the cases.

Rule 24 (a) of the Rules of Civil Procedure, which provides for intervention as of right, reads in part as follows: "Upon timely application anyone shall be permitted to intervene in an action: . . . (2) when the representation of the applicant's interest by existing parties is or may be inadequate and the applicant is or may be bound by a judgment in the action."

The complaint of the intervenors was directed towards the system of competitive bidding. The Department of Justice is the representative of the public in these anti-trust suits. So far as the protection of the public interest in free competition is concerned, the interests of those intervenors was adequately represented. The intervenors, however, claim that the system of competitive bidding would have operated prejudicially to their rights. Cf. United States v. St. Louis Terminal, 236 U. S. 194, 199. Their argument is that the plan of competitive bidding under the control of the defendants would be a concert of action that would be illegal but for the decree. If pursuant to the decree defendants acted under that plan, they would gain immunity from any liability under the anti-trust laws which otherwise they might have to the intervenors. Thus, it is argued, the decree would affect their legal rights and be binding on them. The representation of their interests by the Department of Justice on that score was said to be inadequate since that agency proposed the idea of competitive bidding in the District Court.

We need not consider the merits of that argument. Even if we assume that the intervenors are correct in their position, intervention should be denied here and the orders of the District Court denying leave to intervene must be affirmed. Now that the provisions for competitive bidding have been eliminated from the decree there is no basis for saying that the decree affects their legal rights. Whatever may have been the situation below, no other reason appears why at this stage their intervention is warranted. Any justification for making them parties has disappeared.

The judgment in these cases is affirmed in part and reversed in part, and the cases are remanded to the District Court for proceedings in conformity with this opinion.

So ordered.

MR. JUSTICE JACKSON took no part in the consideration or decision of these cases.

MR. JUSTICE FRANKFURTER, dissenting in part.

"The framing of decrees should take place in the District rather than in Appellate Courts. They are invested with large discretion to model their judgments to fit the exigencies of the particular case." On this guiding consideration, the Court earlier this Term sustained a Sherman Law decree, which was not the outcome of a long trial involving complicated and contested facts and their significance, but the formulation of a summary judgment on the bare bones of pleadings. International Salt Co. v. United States, 332 U. S. 392, 400–401. The record in this case bespeaks more compelling respect for the decree fashioned by the District Court of three judges to put an end to violations of the Sherman Law and to prevent the recurrence, than that which led this Court not to find abuse of discretion in the decree by a single district judge in the International Salt case.

This Court has both the authority and duty to consider whether a decree is well calculated to undo, as far as is possible, the result of transactions forbidden by the Sherman Law and to guard against their repetition. But it is not the function of this Court, and it would ill discharge it, to displace the district courts and write decrees de novo. We are, after all, an appellate tribunal even in Sherman Law cases. It could not be fairly claimed that this Court possesses greater experience, understanding and prophetic insight in relation to the movie industry, and is therefore better equipped to formulate a decree for the movie industry than was the District Court in this case, presided over as it was by one of the wisest of judges.

The terms of the decree in this litigation amount, in effect, to the formulation of a regime for the future conduct of the movie industry. The terms of such a regime, within the scope of judicial oversight, are not to be derived from precedents in the law reports, nor, for that matter, from any other available repository of knowledge. Inescapably the terms must be derived from an assessment of conflicting interests, not quantitatively measureable, and a prophecy regarding the workings of untried remedies for dealing with disclosed evils so as to advance most the comprehensive public interest.

The crucial legal question before us is not whether we would have drawn the decree as the District Court drew it, but whether, on the basis of what came before the District Court, we can say that in fashioning remedies it did not fairly respond to disclosed violations and therefore abused a discretion, the fair exercise of which we should respect and not treat as an abuse. Discretion means a choice of available remedies. As bearing upon this question, it is most relevant to consider whether the District Court showed a sympathetic or mere niggling awareness of the proper scope of the Sherman Law and the range of its condemnation. Adequate remedies are not likely to be fashioned by those who are not hostile to evils to be remedied. The District Court's opinion manifests a stout purpose on the part of that court to enforce its thoroughgoing understanding of the requirements of the Sherman Law as elucidated by this Court. And so we have before us the decree of a district court thoroughly aware of the demands of the Sherman Law and manifestly determined to enforce it in all its rigors.

How did the District Court go about working out the terms of the decree some of which this Court now displaces? The case was before that court from October 8, 1945, to January 22, 1947. A vast body of the evidence which had to be considered below, and must be considered here in overturning the lower court's decree, consisted of documents. A mere enumeration of these documents, not printed in the record before us, required a pamphlet of 42 pages. It took 460 pages for a selection of exhibits deemed appropriate for printing by the Government. The printed record in this Court consists of 3,841 pages. It is on the basis of this vast mass of evidence that the District Court, on June 11, 1946, filed its careful opinion, approved here, as to the substantive issues. Thereafter, it heard argument for three days as to the terms of the judgment. The parties then submitted their proposals for findings of fact and conclusions of law by the District Court. After a long trial, an elaborate opinion on the merits, full discussion as to the terms of the decree, more than two months for the gestation of the decree, the terms were finally promulgated.

I cannot bring myself to conclude that the product of such a painstaking process of adjudication as to a decree appropriate for such a complicated situation as this record discloses was an abuse of discretion, arrived at as it was after due absorption of all the light that could be shed upon remedies appropriate for the future. After all, as to such remedies there is no test, ultimately, except the wisdom of men judged by events.

Accordingly, I would affirm the decree except as to one particular, that regarding an arbitration system for controversies that may arise under the decree. This raises a pure question of law and not a judgment based upon facts and their significance, as are those features of the decree which the Court sets aside. The District Court indicated that "in view of its demonstrated usefulness" such an arbitration system was desirable to aid in the enforcement of the decree. The District Court, however, deemed itself powerless to continue an arbitration system without the consent of the parties. I do not find such want of power in the District Court to select this means of enforcing the decree most effectively, with the least friction and by the most fruitful methods. A decree as detailed and as complicated as is necessary to fit a situation like the one before us is bound, even under the best of circumstances, to raise controversies involving conflicting claims as to facts and their meaning. A court could certainly appoint a master to deal with questions arising under the decree. I do not appreciate why a proved system of arbitration, appropriate as experience has found it to be appropriate for adjudicating numberless questions that arise under such a decree, is not to be treated in effect as a standing master for purposes of this decree. See Ex parte Peterson, 253 U. S. 300. I would therefore leave it to the discretion of the District Court to determine whether such a system is not available as an instrument of auxiliary enforcement. With this exception I would affirm the decree of the District Court.
